PREFACE.

PREFACE.

I.

Contents of the Rolls.

The present volume contains the Exchequer Rolls extant from 6th July 1513 to 31st May 1522, which were audited at Edinburgh at various dates from 4th July 1514 to 31st May 1522. It embraces the accounts of the first nine years of the reign of James v. from shortly before his father's death at Flodden on 9th September 1513, down to shortly before the appointment of the Council of Regency in October 1522. John, Duke of Albany, the King's Tutor or Guardian, and Governor or Regent, governed Scotland from 16th May 1515 to 7th June 1517 as Regent, and again from 19th November 1521 to the spring of 1523, when he visited France for the last time before his final departure from Scotland. He came back on 8th October 1523, and finally retired to France on 20th May 1524. The period under review may be deemed the Regency of Albany, although he did not begin to govern till a year after these accounts commence, and continued Regent for two years after they close. It almost exactly synchronises with the Papacy of Leo x.

There are no detailed Sheriffs' accounts, but the sums received from these officers appear in the accounts of the Comptrollers. The accounts of the Baillies and Custumars of the Royal Burghs are preserved for the whole period, and so are those of the Baillivi ad extra, though with some omissions, and at irregular intervals.

There are no Comptrollers' accounts prior to 1516. On 26th September of that year Sir Alexander Jardine of Applegarth rendered his account as Comptroller from 1st March to 31st August 1516.[1] Andrew Stewart, Bishop of Caithness, who had been Comptroller in the latter part of the preceding reign, continued in office until, or at least rendered his last account on 16th January 1514.[2] He appears to have been superseded by James Redheuch, who accompanied the King to Flodden, and probably fell there, for his heirs and executors are called on to account for the receipts by him from the Custumars of Perth in their account, which includes the year 1513.[3]

In 1515 Sir Patrick Hamilton of Kincavil, and James Kincragy, Dean of Aberdeen, render an account for the four months preceding 2nd November, as Receivers-General of the property of the King. The contents of this Roll (cccxl.) are the same as those of the Comptroller in other years, and in the margin as well as the text[1] of the accounts, Sir Patrick Hamilton is frequently designed Comptroller, so that it is probable the name and not the substance of the office had been temporarily changed until a definite appointment to the office of Comptroller was made. From 12th October 1516[2] to 3rd September 1517, from 3rd September 1517[3] to 25th September 1518, and from 27th August 1518 to 31st May 1522,[4] there are accounts rendered by Robert Barton (Bertoun) of Over Berntoun, a brother of Andrew Barton the sea captain, which prove that Robert Barton held the office of Comptroller during the period from 12th October 1516 to 31st May 1522, when the present volume ends. The cause of the supersession of Jardine by Barton may probably be found in an entry in the Rolls for 1518, which states that the Auditors of Exchequer had ascertained that the King had been defrauded by a long tack of the English customs which Jardine had held, and which he was compelled to renounce on receiving payment of £40.[5]

The Auditors throughout are generally the same persons. James Beaton, Archbishop of Glasgow and Chancellor, Gavin Dunbar, Archdeacon of St Andrews and Clerk Register, afterwards Bishop of Aberdeen, Robert Forman, Dean of Glasgow, brother of Andrew Forman Archbishop of St Andrews, James Kincragy, Dean of Aberdeen, John Campbell of Thorntoun, Treasurer, John White, Rector of Petcokkis, Director of Chancery, and Nicholas Crawford of Oxgang, constantly appear, but a few variations occur in the later audits. At the audits of 18th September 1517 and of 1522, Thomas Halkerston, Provost of Crichton, disappears, and so does James Kincragy, while Thomas Hay, Rector of Ruthven, Secretary of Albany, and John Dingwall, Archdeacon of Caithness, first appear.[1] The absence of a complete audit between 27th August 1518 and 31st May 1522, when more than three years' accounts of the Comptroller were audited, was probably due to the absence of Albany from 7th June 1517 to 19th November 1521, and the disturbed state of the kingdom owing to the contest between the Douglasses and the Hamiltons, the party of Angus and the party of Arran.

Various causes diminished the lands held by the Crown during this period, and consequently diminished its revenues, already lessened by the extravagant liberality of James IV. The ward of Sutherland had lapsed by the infeftment of the new Countess, the wife of Adam Gordon, second son of the Earl of Huntly. Ross and Ardmanach, still in the charge of a Crown Receiver, were disturbed by the raids of the Western Highlanders, and their rents were only partially levied. Stirlingshire and Linlithgowshire, as well as the portions which still remained to the Crown of the Earldom of March and the Forest of Ettrick, had been allocated for the dowry, or conjunct infeftment as it was technically termed, of the Queen Dowager. Orkney and Shetland were held under the tack granted to Lord Sinclair, to which his wife succeeded.[1] No accounts were rendered by the Earl of Argyle for the Lordship of Kintyre from 13th August 1511 to 19th February 1522, because of the war and the waste of these lands since Flodden,[2] and it was not till the audit of 1522 that he gave in an account for the lands of Cowel and Rosneath for the ten years preceding.

The lands still held by the Crown were the Earldom of Fife, which was administered by James Beaton, Archbishop of Glasgow; Bute, for which Ninian Stewart was Chamberlain; the Earldom of Strathearn, of which Patrick Scott was Chamberlain in 1514, but which was in that year transferred to Lord Drummond, who was allowed in 1517 to account for the balance[3] of its revenues by taking more than half to himself for his fee as Keeper of Stirling, and of the person of the King, and for other causes moving the Auditors;[1] the Thanages of Fettercairn and Kintore, and the lands of Coul and O'Neil; the Earldom of Moray, which was alienated from the Crown by the admission of the King's illegitimate brother the Earl of Moray[2] to the Earldom by Parliament in July 1515; the Lordships of Ross and Ardmanach, of which, after the death of the Bishop of Caithness, the Earl of Huntly, and afterwards the Earl of Athole and his widow were Chamberlains; the lands of the Lordship of Galloway; the Granges of Dunbar, part of the old Earldom of March, of which Andrew Forman was Lessee in 1514, but which disappear from the subsequent accounts, probably because part of the Queen Dowager's conjunct infeftment, although she only succeeded in getting a single payment[3] of £91, 13s. 4d. from the domain lands; the Lordship of Balincreif; the lands of Glencairney, Urquhart, Glenmoriston, and Abernethy; the Lordships of Garioch, which John Leslie of Warderis held in feu,[4] and of Brechin and Nevar, Strathdee and Cromar, for all of which the Earl of Huntly was Receiver; the Lordship of Kintyre and the lands of Carrick, Leswalt, and Menybrig.

The Rentals of the King's Lands, which are printed in this volume, from 1st March 1513 to April 1522, continue to afford evidence of the process of converting customary tacks for years or annual holdings into feus, which was pointed out in the Preface to the last volume. It is needless to enter into the same detail a second time. But it may be observed that tacks still went on side by side with feus, and were set for various periods, as for three years, which was the custom in Galloway, or for five, as in Fife,[1] and in exceptional cases for six or nine years,[2] which is the longest term. Dundonald and other lands in Ayrshire, which fell to the Crown in 1518 by the forfeiture of David Hume of Wedderburn, were let to Campbell of Thornton, the Treasurer, and his wife, for five years, who transferred their lease to William Wallace and Elizabeth Campbell, perhaps a daughter of the Treasurer.[3] There are also instances of liferent leases.[4] It was in Fife that the practice of feuing went on most steadily,[5] and its compulsory character is proved by an entry that the tenants should take up their infeftments before Whitsunday on pain of forfeiture;[6] while another inducement to become feuars is shown by the statement that they were now relieved from the services they had formerly rendered as tenants.[7]

The Responde Books from 1513 to 1520 will be found to contain many interesting entries as to lands held in various parts of Scotland as the fees or emoluments for certain offices, as those of Justiciar, Chamberlain, Admiral, Warden or Custodier of Castles and Forests, Sheriff, Coroner, Deemster, Mair or Sergeant, Porter or Janitor, Cellarer, and Executioner.[1]

The tenacity with which land has been held for centuries by the same families is illustrated by many baronies or estates being then the property of the families who hold them in the present day, as Borthwick of Crookston, Gardyne of Gardyne, Irvine of Drum, Mure of Rowallan, Dunbar of Mochrum, Boswell of Auchenleck, Guthrie of Guthrie, Rose of Kilravock, Maxton of Cultoquhey, Hume of Wedderburn, Herries of Terregles, and Edmondston of Duntreath. The smaller barons often escaped the forfeitures which so frequently changed the descent of the greater titles and the lands attached to them. The settled policy of the first four Jameses had succeeded in breaking down the older Earldoms, but a new nobility was gradually rising to the same exorbitant power and accumulating the great estates which in some cases, as in the earldoms of Athole, Argyle, and Huntly, have been transmitted to their descendants. In this, as in other Volumes of the series, the student of the origin of place-names and of surnames will find much aid as to the forms of spelling at a time when the ecclesiastical registers are more scanty or less well preserved.

As might be anticipated in the Accounts, Rentals, and Responde Books, there are many incidental notices which bear on the fatal field of Flodden. The number of widows who render accounts instead of their deceased husbands is remarkable. The most notable are Janet Paterson, widow of Sir Alexander Lauder of Blyth, Provost of Edinburgh, and Margaret Crichton, widow of George Halkerston, a Burgess of Edinburgh, afterwards Countess of Rothes, who continue to discharge the office of Custumars held by their husbands, the former till 20th September 1515, and the latter till 21st August 1517. But there are other examples, as Margaret Lady Sinclair, who continued to hold the tack of Orkney and Shetland, granted to her husband, Henry Lord Sinclair, the Master of Artillery, who died under the King's banner in the camp of Northumberland. The same lady acted as Custumar of Dysart. The accounts, especially the Rentals and Responde Book, are full of references to persons slain at Flodden, or in the course of the campaign in Northumberland, which show how the Act passed at Twizelhauch in favour of their heirs was carried out in practice.[1] The death-roll of Flodden, so far as implicitly shown in these accounts, which represent only of course a small portion of the loss, is given in the Appendix, from which it appears that the remission of entry dues was made to the King's tenants as well as his vassals. With the notices of deaths may be contrasted the payments towards the ransoms of Sir William Scot of Balwearie [1] and James Logan,[2] but two instances of prisoners on that bloody day scarcely derogate from the statement of historians that no prisoners were taken. A single entry records a partial success in the unfortunate campaign. John Ainslie (Hainslie), Captain of Norham, and Edward Gray, Captain of Chillingham, who had been taken prisoners when these castles were destroyed by James on his march to Flodden, were sent to Falkland, and the Chamberlain of Fife is allowed forty merks a week for their expenses during thirteen weeks.[3]

The war against England, by withdrawing the military power at the disposal of the Scottish King, had the natural effect of risings in the Highlands, and several entries refer to these.[4] Strathearn was invaded by the Highlanders of Argyle; Colin, Earl of Argyle, though absent, receives a remission of the rents of Kintyre from 13th August 1511 to 25th February 1521, of which those of 1511–12 were specially remitted by Albany and the remainder by the Auditors with consent of the Chancellor, on consideration of the war which had prevented the Earl from levying the rents down to the day of audit, upon condition that he should faithfully account for them in future. The Highlanders and Islanders of the North-West made raids on Ross-shire, as is shown by the fortification of the Castles of Dingwall and Redcastle by the Bishop of Caithness, as Chamberlain of Ross and Ardmanach, to whom allowances are made on this account. The disturbance in this part of the country continued during Albany's regency, and we learn from several entries that he projected an expedition to Ross along with the young King, though he never carried it out. The Border Counties were perhaps even more disturbed than the Highlands by the raids from England, and the rising of the Humes and other partisans of Angus, but few references to these appear in the accounts.

II.

Sketch of History of Nine Years after Flodden.

The period of these accounts does not contain any event of the first magnitude in the history of Scotland; but it does not deserve the epithet of dull which has been applied to it. It was a time of transition and turmoil, during which the country, favoured by unexpected causes, recovered to a considerable extent from the shock of Flodden. Distracted within itself, Scotland was yet able to maintain external independence. Though too weak to cope with the forces of Henry VIII., the fact that its infant monarch was his nephew modified for a time his hostility, and made him and his ministers hope to gain Scotland by other methods than conquest. The French and English parties now began to assume a definite character, and held an equilibrium or balance of power with a singular alternation of pre-dominance. Neither had sufficient strength to extinguish the other, and perhaps a qualified patriotism restrained them from attempting extreme measures. But the nobles and landed men were constantly engaged in secret intrigues or in open feuds. Their intrigues and conflicts produced several romantic and some tragic incidents: the secret marriage of Margaret Tudor to Angus; her vain but natural endeavour to keep the custody of her infants; the execution of the Humes; the murder of De La Bastie; the fight of Cleanse the Causeway; the reconciliation of the Queen with Albany, and her quarrel with Angus. The lines of demarcation between the two parties, most conveniently called at this period French and English, which for more than a century and a half troubled and divided Scotland, were now first traced. They were to some extent altered in the next generation by the Reformation into those between Romanists and Reformers, whose conflict continued until the Union with England under James VI. as a Protestant but Episcopal monarch, again narrowed the issue into that between the Episcopalian and the Presbyterian forms of Church government. The attempt to precipitate the Union by the marriage of James IV. with Margaret Tudor miscarried, though the Union was the ultimate consequence of that alliance. During the period from the accession of Henry VIII. to the death of Elizabeth, the English succession in a direct line remained in suspense, and the possibility of the Scottish monarch becoming the nearest heir was never absent from the calculations of English or Scottish Statesmen. That of Scotland itself depended for three generations on the single lives of James V., Mary Stuart, and James VI., each of whom had a long minority. During the brief portion of the period with which we are here concerned—the years from 1513 to 1522,—the death of the Earl of Ross, the posthumous child of James IV., in 1514, left John, Duke of Albany, son of Alexander, Duke of Albany, brother of James III., the next heir to the Crown. After him stood the Earl of Arran, son of Mary, the sister of James III. The exile of the elder Albany had led to the birth, education, and marriage of his son in France, where his wife, Anne de la Tour D'Auvergne, a niece of his mother, inherited part of the great fiefs of Boulogne and of Auvergne, which he administered in her right. He held also the high office of Admiral under the French monarch, and continued throughout his life more than half a Frenchman, ignorant, or at least imperfectly acquainted with the language of the people he was summoned to govern.[1] A French author translated the Chronicles of Fordoun and Boece for his use. He called France his country and Francis I. his master. He always signed his Christian name Jehan, not John. After his return to France in 1524 he never saw Scotland again. No one pressed him, and he did not desire to visit that unruly country a third time. Arran, by nature an unstable character, wavered between France and England, until his rivalry with Angus forced him to prefer the French interest. Angus, with the hereditary ambition, the bravery and the ability of his race, was a more serious aspirant to the throne than either Albany or Arran.

By the will of James IV., the guardianship of James V., an infant under two years, was conferred on his mother the Queen Dowager, and this gave her a preferential claim to the Regency, which was confirmed by Parliament in July 1514. Her imprudent and rash second marriage in August of that year to Angus, the grandson and successor of Angus Bell-the-Cat, forfeited her title both to the Regency and the custody of the young King. The advent of Albany from France, always desired by the French party in Scotland, but delayed partly by his own reluctance and partly through the influence of Henry VIII., was at last effected. He landed at Ayr on 16th and at Dumbarton on 18th May 1515, and was appointed Governor or Regent by Parliament on 12th July. His Regency was to endure till James attained his 18th year, which he would not do till April 1530, so there was a prospect of a long interregnum under a viceroy who might in certain contingencies become a sovereign. Albany remained in Scotland rather more than two years, returning to France on 7th June 1517. During this short stay he showed great activity. He obtained by force the transfer of the custody of the young King from his mother to certain Peers in his interest. He compelled Margaret to take refuge in England, where her daughter by Angus, Lady Margaret Douglas, afterwards Countess of Lennox, and mother of Darnley, was born at Harbottle on 18th October 1515. He defeated the intrigues of Angus, Arran, and Hume, which were fomented by Thomas, Lord Dacre, the English Warden, an unscrupulous but able politician, and a ruthless Border commander. The castles of Arran and his adherents in the West were seized, though terms were soon made with him; and a second rebellion was with equal facility repressed. Gavin Douglas was tried before the Privy Council for purchasing from the Pope the See of Dunkeld without the King's license, condemned and put in ward in July 1515, but was released a year after at the instance of the Pope and the Queen Dowager.

Angus had followed Margaret across the Border, but quarrelling with her, returned to Scotland, and also made terms with the Regent. When Henry heard that Angus had deserted his sister, he is said to have exclaimed "Done like a Scot!" and the natural leader of the English interest in Scotland was alienated from the English King by his marriage, of which Henry disapproved, and by his ambition, which led him to aim at supreme and independent power. Alexander Lord Hume, the Chamberlain, and his brother, having imprudently placed themselves in Albany's hands by visiting him at Edinburgh, were seized and executed in the beginning of October 1516. Their castles in the Merse were taken and their estates forfeited. Lord Fleming was appointed Chamberlain; Antony D'Arcy De La Bastie, a French knight and intimate of the Regent, was made Captain of Dunbar and Warden of the Eastern March. On Albany's return from the Merse, a Parliament held at Edinburgh, on 13th November, declared the elder brother of the Regent, Alexander Stewart, illegitimate, and Albany the second person in the realm, and nearest heir to the Crown.

Having thus reduced Scotland and secured his own title, Albany procured a reluctant assent from Parliament to his return to France for four months only, and sailed from Dumbarton on 7th June 1517. The young King was left in charge of Keith the Earl Marshall, and Lords Erskine, Borthwick, and Ruthven. A Regency consisting of the leaders of the two opposed, but for a time reconciled parties, Forman, Archbishop of St Andrews, Beaton, Archbishop of Glasgow, Angus and Arran, with Alexander Earl of Huntly, and Colin Earl of Argyle, the two most powerful nobles in the North and West Highlands, was named to govern in his absence. Albany took with him to France the eldest sons of several of the Scotch nobles as hostages. Dunbar, Inchgarvie, and Dumbarton were placed as pledges in the hands of French captains, and De La Bastie, as Albany's representative, had an important share in the Government. Albany remained in France upwards of four years instead of four months, and did not return till 19th November 1521, when he landed at the Gareloch, a bay of the Firth of Clyde.

During his absence the disputes between the rival parties broke out afresh, and Scotland became the scene of a partisan civil war. De La Bastie, hated by the Humes on account of the death of their chief and his succession to the Wardenship of the Eastern March, and the custody of the castle of Dunbar, was slain by David Hume of Wedderburn, his brothers, and retainers, on 17th September 1517. The Council appointed Arran Warden of the Marches in his place, which roused the jealousy of Angus, who desired that office. The imprisonment and exile of his brother Sir George Douglas and Mark Ker of Ferniehirst, on suspicion of their participation in the murder of De La Bastie, increased his resentment. David Hume, Prior of Coldingham, was assassinated by James Hepburn of Hailes. His death was avenged by the murder of Blackadder, his successor in the Priory, by Hume of Wedderburn, a habitual shedder of blood ; and William Douglas, another brother of Angus, was put into possession of the vacant Priory.

A Parliament at Edinburgh, on 19th February 1518, forfeited Hume of Wedderburn, his brothers, and other accomplices in the murder of De La Bastie, and Arran proceeded to the Merse to execute the sentence. The castles of Hume, Langton, and Wedderburn surrendered, but the murderers, who had fled to England, were not brought to justice, and continued to hover on the Borders until Angus became dominant, when they recovered their castles and estates. The contest for the supreme power between Arran and Angus culminated in a conflict for the office of Provost and the possession of the Capital. In December 1519 Archibald Douglas, uncle of Angus, was chosen Provost of Edinburgh, where another of his uncles, Gavin Douglas, famous as a man of letters, but impotent as a man of action, held from 1502–3 to 1521 the office of Provost of St Giles', and after being long baffled in his desire for further preferment, at last obtained possession by force for a short space of the See of Dunkeld. In the same month Arran made an unsuccessful assault upon Edinburgh. The young King was brought to the Castle by Angus and the Lords and Prelates of his party, Errol, Crawford, Glamis, Forman, Archbishop of St Andrews, and the Bishops of Dunblane, Dunkeld, Aberdeen, and Orkney. Arran made Glasgow his head-quarters, where he was supported by James Beaton, Archbishop of that See, and Chancellor, the Bishop of Galloway, and the Lords of the West, Lennox, Eglinton, Cassilis, Sempill, and Ross. Robert Logan was elected Provost of Edinburgh, in obedience to an order issued in the name of Albany, against the choice of either a Douglas or a Hamilton. A Parliament was summoned to meet in Edinburgh on 29th April 1520. The rivals and their partisans came to the Capital, but instead of a Parliament there was a street fight. On both sides a vain attempt was made at reconciliation. On 30th April Gavin Douglas tried to influence Archbishop Beaton by an appeal to the duty of ministers of peace, now beginning to be recognised, to stay or mitigate rather than provoke or abet war. Beaton protested that he could not prevent bloodshed, and struck his hand on his breast to confirm his words. The armour hidden by his cassock rattled, when Douglas exclaimed, "My lord, your conscience clatters,"—one of the pithy Scottish speeches which has become historical. Sir Patrick Hamilton, the brother of Arran, showing some disposition to a pacification, or at least unwillingness to fight, was reproached by the bastard of Arran, Sir James Hamilton of Finnart, who said "he had no will to fight in his friend's cause, however just;" to which Sir Patrick replied, "Bastard smaik, thou liest. I shall fight this day where thou darest not be seen," and rushed down the Blackfriars' Wynd, where this altercation had taken place, into the High Street. He was followed by Lord Montgomerie, eldest son of Eglinton, and others of his party. When Arran saw them coming, and that they were about to meet a stronger party of the followers of Angus, who had barricaded the closes on the south side of the High Street, and held the space opposite the entry of the Blackfriars' Wynd, he shouted "Save Sir Patrick!" William Douglas, Prior of Coldingham, brother of Angus, and David Hume of Wedderburn, his brother-in-law, on the same day, doubtless by concert, broke into the town at the Nether Bow, but before they had come up the High Street the fray was over. Sir Patrick and Montgomerie, who were in advance of their party, were first slain, and after them some three score and ten of the adherents of Arran, so that the High Street was cleared, and the fight got the name of "Cleanse the Causeway," perhaps another of the shouts heard in the heat of the medley, or it may have been the order given when the street was cleansed from blood. Arran, with those that were left, fled down a lane on the north of High Street, crossed the North Loch and escaped. Beaton, who had taken refuge at the altar of the Black Friars, is said by Pitscottie to have been saved by Gavin Douglas, who observed it would be a shame to kill a bishop; but Leslie's account is more probable, that he too fled with Arran, or, according to Hume of Godscroft, on foot by himself to Linlithgow. Angus remained master of the Capital. In the Border counties David Hume of Wedderburn recovered possession of his own castle and of the Merse, although opposed for a time it seems by young Lord Hume, who, deserting the traditions of his house, desired the return of Albany.

The strained personal relations between the Queen and Angus had an important influence on the political position. He had not accompanied her to the Court of Henry VIII., preferring the society of a lady of Douglasdale, of the house of Traquair. Margaret, with the spirit of a Tudor, had not concealed her anger. She was determined at all costs on a divorce, for which an alleged pre-contract of marriage, if proved, was a valid ground by ecclesiastical law, which his adultery would not have been. Henry VIII., not yet determined on his own divorce, disliked the scandal, or perhaps thought that remedy should be confined to his own sex, and remonstrated with his sister. Angus met his injured wife on the Border in May 1517 when she returned to Scotland, but their reconciliation was formal, and they did not resume cohabitation. Margaret, finding she would receive no support in her suit from Henry VIII. or Wolsey, now turned to her old adversary Albany, and became as anxious for his return as she had been for his departure. The French party, headed by Arran and Beaton, was naturally desirous he should return. Those who were neutral in the struggle between the Hamiltons and the Douglases, which was distracting and ruining the country, were of the same mind, as is strikingly shown by a poem[1] of Dunbar written about this time, as well as by the works of Sir David Lindsay,[2] composed at a later date.

At last, after much pressure, Albany left France. He eluded the English spies and ships by sailing round Ireland and landing at the Gareloch, on the west coast, on 19th November 1521, came to Edinburgh, accompanied by the Queen, who joined him at Linlithgow on 3rd December, received the custody of the young King then in the Castle, and called a Parliament for the 26th of that month. Angus and his brother George, who had fled from Edinburgh on the approach of Albany, now went or were sent to France,—a curious destination, probably explained by the enmity of Henry VIII. making England an impossible asylum. Gavin Douglas, however, took refuge in London, where, after pouring embittered and in part fictitious charges against Albany and the Queen into the ears of Henry VIII. and Wolsey, he died an exile in 1522.

The party of the Douglases was for a time dispersed. Albany was again sole Regent, and prudently tried to strengthen his position by attempting to gain the goodwill of Lord Dacre, the English Warden, while the Queen wrote to Henry VIII. in his favour. But he remained French at heart, and his restoration meant the revival of French influence in Scotland. Henry VIII. was not a man to be cajoled by words. He remonstrated bitterly, both in letters and through the mission of Chadworth a Friar Observant, with Margaret for her relations with Albany and her desire for a divorce; and he addressed a letter to the Scottish Estates, warning them that if Albany was not removed from the Regency he would declare war. They indignantly repelled his dictation, and in April 1522 a small English fleet of seven vessels commenced hostilities by ravaging the coasts of the Forth and seizing some Scottish ships near Inchkeith.

It is at this point that the period embraced in the present volume of the Exchequer Rolls ends. How soon and why Albany lost or threw away the advantages of his position are matters which lie beyond the present, and must be elucidated in the following volume.

Here it is only proper to remark that the scanty parliamentary records during the troubled period from 1513 to 1522, and the discrepancies and inaccuracies of Scottish contemporary historians, especially though not solely in dates, which, in the case of Lindsay of Pitscottie, make an inexplicable confusion as to the order of the events he so graphically describes, render the accounts now published of much importance and interest. The light they afford is not so great as might be desired, and is thrown upon the minute details of the period more than on leading events. It may appear the dry light of the antiquarian rather than the bright colours of the historian, but it is derived from authentic contemporary records, and cannot be neglected by any future writer on this period of Scottish history. By such details we become familiar with the character of a nation and an epoch.

III.

The Principal Personages of this Period.

James v. was an infant under two years of age when these accounts commence, and was not yet twelve when they conclude. It is only traces of his infancy that we can expect, yet such traces have the interest which the little things of childhood possess, especially when the child is royal and his destiny tragic. We find him in the first notices of the present accounts, along with his younger brother Alexander, the short-lived Duke of Ross, under the care of his mother, until she was forced to surrender them to Albany at Stirling in August 1515. Afterwards he resided in the Castle of Edinburgh, which appears to have been thought the safest place of custody. He was removed to Craigmillar or Dalkeith only when there was risk from the plague in Edinburgh. The Queen Dowager resided chiefly at Linlithgow or Stirling, and the Linlithgowshire account rendered by Andrew Crichton its Chamberlain on 4th July 1514, contains several entries relating to the royal household. Amongst these is the fee of £10, 8s. paid to Thomas Shaw, the principal cook of the King,[1] who is called the Queen's cook in another account,[2] and who, like the gardener of Stirling had served in the campaign of Flodden, where he had been taken prisoner and had lost £20, though, more fortunate than the gardener, he escaped with his life. There is also a delivery of wheat to Martin Hunter, the baker of the King and Queen.[3] In the Fife account of the same year, rendered by James Beaton, appear the fees of John Pantre the King's butler,[4] of David Lindsay the poet, the King's usher, [5] and of Thomas Forrester and John Inglis, his marshals.[6]

The Fife accounts show that Margaret and her sons occasionally visited Falkland, although only for short periods in summer or autumn.[7]

In the Edinburgh accounts for 1515, Janet Paterson, widow of Sir Alexander Lauder the Provost, who was slain at Flodden, is allowed credit for the price of two tunics, one of silk, and the other of crammosy velvet, bought for the King by his mother's orders,[1] and also for the price of the velvet used for the same, or possibly for two other tunics.[2] In the same year the Receivers-General, Sir Patrick Hamilton and the Dean of Aberdeen, are allowed credit for the fees of other officers of the King's household, viz., William Duly, James Craig, and Henry Mair, grooms of his Chamber, George Dempster an usher, Henry Dempster the steward, John Bisset a cook, who had a groom of the kitchen and a turnspit under him, Robert Muncur the caterer, William Balfour the janitor, and John Graham the trumpeter.[3] The two Princes had each a nurse. Christian Wylle[4] and Mariot Douglas[5] were the nurses of the King, probably in succession, and the former was pensioned in her old age. Catherine Fyn,[6] formerly nurse of Prince Arthur, was the nurse of the Duke of Ross, and under these were four "rokkaris of the cradle."[7] The King had also two other women servants[8] and a laundress, Mawes Atkinson.[9] The livery of Duly, Craig, Dempster and David Crichton, a servant in the King's pantry, is paid for out of the Edinburgh Customs in 1516,[10] and was made of 20 ells of French tanny, 10 ells of camelot, a cloth originally made of camel's hair, and 5 ells of cairsay or kersey, so called from the place of that name in Suffolk. William Duly is no doubt the "Willy Dillie" of Lindsay's verses in the Complaint :—

> "I tak the Quenis Grace, thy mother,
> My Lord Chancelare, and mony uther
> Thy Nowreis, and thy auld Maistres,
> I tak thame all to beir wytnes ;
> Auld Willie Dillie, wer he on lyve,
> My lyfe full weill he could discryve."

Duly and Craig were expelled from the Household in 1517 along with two other servants, but were allowed 5 merks till they could get other masters.[1] They were restored next year, for in the accounts of 1518[2] and again in 1522[3] they appear as valets of the King's Chamber at a wage of 4 merks a year. They had probably grown grey in the service, and it was found as cheap to retain them as to pension them. Duly must have died before 1529, when the Complaint was written. David Lindsay himself received a fee of £20 in 1514,[4] raised to £30 in 1516,[5] and to £40 in 1522,[6] as the King's usher, payments which mark his gradual rise in the service, and support the conjecture that he was the same person who served, with only £8, 16s. 8d. wages,[7] as groom of the stable of the King's elder brother Arthur, as was suggested in the last volume. In 1518 we begin to notice items which denote the King's advance in age, though he was not yet seven years old. His nurse still receives 100 merks a year, but there are no "rokkaris of the cradle," and the education which must necessarily begin early in the case of a Prince who might be called on to govern young had commenced. The cost of repairing the chamber in the Castle of Edinburgh where he was instructed is entered at £2, 12s.,[1] and his preceptor, Gavin Dunbar, had a salary of £100,[2] though he had to discharge it for £50. He had also a surgeon, Robert Kynnard, with a fee of £20, a barber, John Murray, with a fee of £10, and a tailor, who got £3.[3]

In the account of the Comptroller rendered on 3rd September 1517,[4] the expenses of the King and his household for thirteen calendar months and one day were £1169, 1s. 5d., besides £126, 19s. 2d. for spices and chandlery, and £69, 10s. 9d. for sundries.[5] In that rendered on 27th August 1518, the expenses of the King and his household for twelve calendar months, less seven days,[6] are entered at £1538, 10s. 2d., £131, 5s. 7d. for spices and chandlery, and £62, 5s. 5d. for sundries. No similar account was audited in 1519, 1520, and 1521, but in 1522 the same officer renders an account for three years and nine months, from which it appears that these expenses were for the year ending 1st September 1519, £1415, 4s.

6d., for that ending 1st September 1520, £1880, 11s. 1d., for that ending 1st September 1521, £1574, 7s. 7d., and for the following nine months £1265, 5s. 10d., but to this has to be added for spices and chandlery £625, 10s. 10½d., and for sundries £217, 4s. 8d., during the same period of three years and nine months.[1] If these sums are added, the average expenditure on the royal household is in round figures about £127 per calendar month. This is exclusive of the salaries of Lord Drummond, who had the custody of the royal person before the arrival of Albany, and the three Lords, Borthwick, Ruthven, and Erskine, to whom it was entrusted by Albany, each of whom received £200 a year. William Keith, the Earl Marshall, is not mentioned in the accounts, and perhaps it may be an error of the historians to suppose he ever held the office of Custodier of the King. Sir Patrick Crichton, Captain of the Castle of Edinburgh, had two raised to four hundred merks a year during the King's residence[2] and there were various other royal servants, both military and civil.

We are struck by the moderation of these expenses and the precision with which the accounts are kept. This was probably due to the good stewardship of Robert Barton as Comptroller, and the necessity of keeping down charges on an exchequer which James IV. had exhausted, and which was during this period with difficulty replenished.

But it must be kept in view, of course, that the royal expenses were those of an infant, and that the Queen Dowager and Albany as Governor had for considerable portions of this period also to be maintained out of the Crown revenues. The accounts lend no support to the view which Margaret Tudor, always reckless in her accusations, threw out that Albany was careless or indifferent to the health or education of the King. The weakness in constitution and character which came to the surface at the close of the short life of James v. was due to the imprudent indulgence of his mother and not to any neglect or design of Albany.

Margaret Tudor leaves, as might be expected, marks of her wayward and self-willed course in the accounts, but does not appear so frequently as other leading personages. She was indeed hardly a leading personage. She was only a disturbing element in politics. Womanlike, she aspired to lead, but required to be led, and with headlong impetuosity threw herself and her grievances upon Angus, Henry VIII., Albany, Lord Dacre, and Wolsey, or quarrelled with them, as suited her caprice for the time. With the passions and the policy of a Tudor, her passions spoilt her policy and wrecked her life. She lived in a country and time in which a woman was seldom allowed to rule.

A few dates will explain the references to her in this volume. On 30th April 1514 she bore her posthumous son, Alexander, Duke of Ross, who, like all her offspring except James v. and Margaret Douglas, died young, on 18th December of the next year. On 4th August 1514 she was privately married to Angus at the Chapel of Kinnoul in Strathearn. The appointment of Lord Drummond, the grandfather of Angus, who favoured the match, to the Chamberlainship of Strathearn,[1] as well as to the custody of Stirling Castle and the King, is a mark of the beginning of the connection which led to her marriage, though the appointment took place on 1st May 1514,[2] some months before the marriage.

Albany's Parliament, which met in Edinburgh on 12th July 1515, declared that the Queen had forfeited the Regency and guardianship by her second marriage, and on 4th August its decree was put into execution. She was deprived of her children, and forced to surrender Stirling Castle to Albany. She was herself closely watched, first in Stirling, then in Edinburgh, and afterwards in Linlithgow, to which she went under the pretence that she required to keep her chamber in anticipation of her approaching confinement. From Linlithgow she escaped to Tantallon in the end of August, where she remained till 23rd September. From Tantallon she fled across the Borders, and gave birth to Lady Margaret Douglas, the mother of Darnley, at Harbottle on 30th October. There she had a dangerous illness, but in the spring she recovered sufficiently to travel to London, where she came on 3rd May 1516, and remained in or near her brother's court till 18th May 1517. The news that Albany was about to leave led her to return to Scotland, and as soon as she heard he had sailed, she crossed the Border and was received at Berwick in the middle of June by several of the Scottish nobles, La Bastie the Warden of the East March, and her husband Angus. But the coolness between her and Angus continued. It was observed that little attention was paid to him, which must have galled his proud spirit. They did not ever again live together as husband and wife.

The Queen's residence during 1513 and 1514 having been principally at Linlithgow or Stirling, the wages of her servants appear chiefly in the accounts of the Chamberlains of Linlithgow and Stirling, but also in those of Fife, from which we learn that she paid flying visits to Falkland from 13th to 25th October 1513, from 22nd to 24th July, and again from 17th to 20th October 1514, when she is expressly noted to have been at Perth.[1] The first of these entries is minutely dated "from dinner-time"[2] (a prandio) on 13th October, and it is a permissible conjecture that all these visits were on her road from Stirling to Perth to meet Angus or Lord Drummond, for which Falkland would be a convenient half-way house. A marked distinction occurs in the accounts of 1515. When payments were made on her mandate it is always specially noted that the mandate was "during her widowhood,"[1] or "before her contract of marriage,"[2] doubtless because the Auditors of Exchequer refused to honour her drafts, to use modern language, after she became the wife of Angus. In one instance, however, of a payment to Sir Patrick Crichton as Captain of the Castle of Edinburgh, the precept is said to have been signed by the Queen, the Governor, and the Lords of Council. This must have been after the arrival of Albany during the brief time they were on good terms, or possibly she signed it under compulsion.

[1] Page 13. There appears to be some error or confusion in the statement, page 11, that she was at Falkland from "19th October to 13th October at dinner."

The account of Fife, rendered by Beaton for two years on 7th August 1516, contains some curious entries relative to the Queen, and discloses a fact hitherto unknown in history. Beaton receives payment of £140 "for the expenses of two hundred persons in Falkland who remained along with the Chancellor," Beaton himself, "to resist the Queen in her violent and unjust actions."[3] He also fortified the palace, and the price is allowed him of "two cannons called 'pas volantis'[4] and of two others of smaller size, eight hackbuts, five barrels of the powder called gun powder, three culverins, five pounds of culverin powder, four crossbows and eight dozen bolts and six strings for these, six Leith axes, eight halberts, sixteen halbrekis, and the same number of steel bonnets."[1] In another entry[2] the garrison of 200 men is said to have been kept in Falkland for three weeks to prevent the Queen from besieging the Castle, and the expenses of a reduced force of 16 men is allowed for forty-six weeks. The 16 were probably those for whom the armour was provided. The period during which they formed the garrison was from 9th August 1514 to 28th June 1515, and the larger force of 200, the entry with regard to which is undated, probably occupied the castle at the time when Beaton was deprived of the Great Seal by force,[3] and was apprehensive of an attack on Falkland by the Queen or Angus, who about this time tried unsuccessfully to raise the siege of St Andrews Castle by Prior Hepburn.[4]

It has been asserted by Pinkerton, Tytler, and Burton that when the Parliament of 1515 decreed that Margaret should surrender her children, she had come from Stirling to Edinburgh and held the Castle, and a dramatic scene drawn by Pinkerton,[5] and coloured by Miss Strickland,[6] represents her as dropping the portcullis of Edinburgh Castle when first summoned to deliver up the royal infants. The date assigned for this scene by Pinkerton is "about 22nd July," but it is very improbable that Margaret was in Edinburgh Castle at that date, and the present Accounts do not lend any support to it. The story rests entirely on a letter from Lord Dacre on 1st August 1515 to the English Council, where an account of such an interview is no doubt given, but the letter does not state that she was in Edinburgh Castle. The speech ascribed to her in the same letter in which she claims the Castle as part of her conjunct infeftment proves that if the scene took place it must have been at Stirling, for Edinburgh was not included in her "conjunct infeftment."[1] It is not unlikely that she received a summons to surrender the children before Albany himself marched to Stirling, on 4th August, and her conduct in this scene is quite consistent with her character. During the year from May 1516 to May 1517, which she spent at her brother's Court in England, her name naturally disappears from the accounts. Nor does it again appear until the Fife accounts from 9th August 1518 to 26th February 1521, in which her old adversary James Beaton is allowed credit for £200 paid to her on the mandate of Robert Barton the Comptroller.[2] The last reference to her is significant. In the Comptroller's own account rendered on 31st May 1522 he is allowed credit for the large sum of £6408, 1s. 4d. paid to her by the precept of the Governor and Lords of Council because of the failure to pay the rents of her lands held in conjunct infeftment, for which she pledged her right to these rents.[1] She had now joined the party of Albany, but could not get possession of her estates, which were in the possession of Angus. On 4th December 1521 she wrote to Dacre:—"My Lord Dacre,—I commend me to you, and wit ye that my Lord Duke of Albany, Governor of Scotland, is come for to do service to the King, my son, and to the realm, and to help me to be assured and obeyed of my living, which I have great need of; for there was never gentlewoman of my estate so evil-entreated and my living holden from me, as I have written to you many times of before."[2] She had quarrelled with Henry and Wolsey because of her desire to be divorced from Angus. Dacre treated her expostulations with the cool contempt so irritating to an impatient woman, and she transferred such influence as she had to the side of Albany. Whether there was any truth in the scandal which Henry and his ministers believed and circulated, that she contemplated nearer relations with Albany, and would have married him had

[2] Brewer, Preface to State Papers of Henry VIII., i. p. 519.

she procured a divorce, is a point on which we cannot expect revelations from the accounts. His wife being still alive, it is improbable ; but it is evident that both in the matter of the divorce and her jointure Albany did all he could to help her. It is to this period that the curious and enigmatical picture in the possession of the Marquis of Bute at Cardiff[1] probably belongs. In it Margaret is represented vis-a-vis to Albany. Her face, similar to that in other portraits, shows the small mouth, sensuous chin, the singular upper lip turned up at both ends, and the large eyes which appear in the fat faces of the Tudors. Her portly frame reminds us of her brother. The jewels on her neck and finely chased waist-belt may be some of the presents she received from Henry or her father's legacy. Albany is also depicted as a man of goodly proportion, dressed in a rich robe, trimmed with fur. A handkerchief, covering a purse or possibly a document, is passing from the right hand of Margaret to the left hand of Albany, who holds a purse in his right hand. Some coins are scattered on the table, in the foreground of the picture, where there are also a round box with the lid open, an ink-horn, sealing wax, and feather pens. Behind Margaret, and half-concealed, but with three-quarter face, stands a third

[1] It is reproduced in Small's edition of the Works of Gavin Douglas, p. xvii, and in Pinkerton's Scottish Gallery, 1799. figure of a man, apparently a royal servant, with his finger pointing to Albany, or to a butterfly which flutters in the air between her and Albany. It is evident that the picture represents no love-affair, but some money transaction, possibly the handing over of the sum mentioned in these accounts in return for a mortgage on her estates. But for whom and why such a picture, with its satiric touch, was painted remains a mystery.

Albany, the Lord Governor, as he is styled throughout the accounts, is the central figure of this period in Scotland, though he only remained in it from 16th May 1515 to 8th June 1517, and from 19th November 1521 to October 1522, a little beyond the close of the present Accounts. He returned again to Scotland and landed at Kirkcudbright in September or early in October 1523, but left in July following, and "til us," says Leslie, "never again he turned."[1] We are enabled by the accounts to present a more minute description of his household and its cost, his pursuits and manner of life, than from any source hitherto available. The expenses of Lyon King of Arms are paid out of the Customs of Edinburgh in the account of 1515, "for the last time he went to the Governor in France and suffered shipwreck," from which it would appear that Cumming the Lyon King had crossed the sea more than once to urge Albany to come to Scotland. The exact date of Albany's arrival, 16th May 1515, is fixed by another entry,[1] and the discrepancy of dating his arrival on the 18th, as is done by some writers, is explained by the earlier date referring to his landing at Ayr, the latter at Dumbarton. Parliament met almost immediately on 12th July 1515,[2] and the Exchequer sat from 5th July to 2nd November.[3] At this Parliament the Earl of Moray, an illegitimate brother of the King, was admitted, as an important entry[4] shows, to the Earldom by the Governor and the Three Estates assembled in Parliament (parliamentaliter congregati). Most of the payments allowed at this audit naturally related to the expenses incurred before Albany came, upon the mandate of the Queen or the Lords of Council. The interest Albany took in sport is shown by the early occurrence of payments for falcons from Orkney and Shetland for his use, and the fee of a falconer in Galloway paid by his special precept.[5] The provisioning of his household was at once attended to, and salt pork and marts[6] were sent from Orkney for its use. From a later account it appears that claret and wine of Gascony had been furnished to him and his family (an expression which means his suite for his wife never came to Scotland) while in Brittany and on the sea before he landed in Scotland. The frequent recurrence of payments for his wine bills, generally claret, but also wine of Beaune and Gascony, show he had a Frenchman's taste for his native wine. When he went to sup with Margaret Crichton in Edinburgh he had his claret sent, and the Exchequer paid for it. The whole of his household expenses, amounting to £3403, 17s. 10d., for four calendar months from 1st July to 1st November 1515, are allowed in the audit of 2nd November. He paid a visit in this year to De La Bastie at Dunbar,[1] and ale was provided for his use. He had projected a tour, accompanied by the young King, to Ross, where the Bishop of Caithness had difficulty in holding the Castle of Dingwall and Red Castle[2] against the men of the Isles and other Highlanders, for fuel[3] was sent there in expectation of his coming, but more urgent business prevented him. The same entries recurring in subsequent years show that he still desired to visit that distant province, though he never in fact accomplished the journey. He was indeed too busily occupied in checkmating the Queen in the matter of the custody of her son, in protecting himself against the rival ambition of Angus and of Arran, in the invidious task of settling the ecclesiastical vacancies, and in defeating the plots of Hume, who, though instrumental in bringing him to Scotland, was prejudiced against him, as was reported by an imprudent speech

Albany made when they met "Minuit præsentia famam," referring to the low stature of the Chamberlain. The Palace of Holyrood had been put in repair for his reception,[1] and he no doubt lived there while in Edinburgh for the Parliament and Exchequer of 1515. After the surrender of Stirling and the person of the King, Albany returned to Holyrood on 14th August, bringing the King with him. In the end of that month he assembled a large army on the Borough Muir and marched to the Borders to put down the rising of the Humes. By 12th September he had taken Hume Castle, and the Chamberlain having met him at Dunglas under a safe-conduct, was first thrown into a dungeon and then sent to Edinburgh under the custody of Arran. That unstable noble not only let his prisoner escape, but fled with him, and joined in a bond, executed by himself and Hume, of mutual offence and defence against Albany. Albany then went to besiege Hamilton Castle, the seat of Arran, but on the petition of his mother, pardoned him. Margaret and Angus had meantime taken refuge in England. But of these stormy events no direct traces appear in the accounts.

On 18th February 1516 Albany was at Linlithgow,[2] but in April he had taken up his residence in Falkland, and the accounts of his household there from 19th April to 31st August 1516 [3] are allowed to Beaton, who had paid them out of the revenue of Fife, as well as the keep of his horses[1] but Albany himself appears to have left on 20th June.[2] Another entry[3] shows that he remained at Falkland from 1st to 12th September 1516. From the specialty and short time of this allowance it appears probable that he left Falkland on the latter date, and we know in fact that the Parliament or Council which condemned Hume and his brother, and at which Albany was undoubtedly present,[4] met in the latter part of that month, and their executions followed on 8th and 9th October. After this, Albany went to the Borders to carry out the forfeiture of the Humes by the seizure of their estates. He returned to Edinburgh, probably early in November, when the Parliament again met, distributed various lands belonging to the Humes amongst his adherents, and on 13th passed the important and singular Act by which his brother Alexander, a son of his father by a daughter of the Earl of Orkney, was declared illegitimate, and Albany next heir to the Crown.[5] At the same time he got the reluctant consent of the Estates for his return to France. As preparatory to this De La Bastie was named Warden of the Eastern Marches, and Alan Stewart, Captain of Milan, received the custody of Dumbarton Castle.

The payment of his wine from 1st March to 31st August 1516 [1] does not state when the wine was consumed, though it was entered in his household books, unfortunately not preserved, nor is any date given of the supper [2] at the house of Margaret Crichton, then one of the Custumars of Edinburgh. Crochet, the French Master of his Household, was present on 26th September, at the Exchequer audit at Edinburgh, for the period from 1st March to 31st August, and from the account then rendered by Jardine of Applegarth, the Comptroller, we learn that Albany had paid a visit to Perth [3] and also to Dunbar [4] in the autumn of this year. He did not sail for France till 6th June 1517,[5] and the expenses of his household from 1st to 12th September 1516 at Falkland were allowed to Beaton in his account of 1517.[6] Between 8th January and 18th February of that year he was at Falkland, and returned there on 24th March. A visit by him to Dundee finds its record in the accounts of the Custumars of that town between 24th July 1516 and 23rd July 1517, but as the whole cost for provisions and fuel was £17, 14s., and for lodgings and "belcheir" £5, it cannot have been of long duration.[7] and frequently in the Scottish Treasurer's Accounts about this period.

The freight of his horses to France was paid by the Custumar of Edinburgh,[1] and from the Treasurer's Accounts we learn that his falconer with hawks and merlyons followed or accompanied him.[2]

Four of his servants were put on board wages until his return by his express orders,[3] "usque ad adventum ipsius Dei gratia ad regnum." The use of the expression "Dei gratia," as well as the title "Majestas," occasionally applied to Albany, although not in the present Accounts, his calling De La Bastie "Our Warden," and above all, the solemn declaration of his being next heir to the Crown, were no doubt among the circumstances which gave rise to the rumour that Albany aimed at the Crown. The date of his return to Scotland towards the close of 1521 has been variously stated by historians. The precise date is probably supplied by an entry in the Comptroller's accounts audited in 1522, which shows that his expenses were paid from 3rd December 1521 to 31st May 1522.[4]

The accounts bring before us a considerable number of Frenchmen in his service, and show how expensive a governor he was for a country like Scotland, especially when the payments on his account are compared with those on account of the King and the Queen. Besides De La Bastie and his subordinates at Dunbar, there are notices of payments to Crochet,[1] Master of the Household in 1516, and Captain Janet,[2] a second Master of the household in the same year. Saturnino, his banker,[3] probably an Italian, Jacques Merchel, his secretary, and Captain Grosellis,[4] who received the custody of St Andrews in 1522, are also styled Master of the Household of the Governor.

A troop of six Italian actors (histriones) who are expressly called the Lord Governor's,[5] appear throughout these accounts, although there seems to have been a similar troop before his coming to Scotland. They receive £35 in 1516, and four of them who left in 1517 got a gratuity of £15 a-piece. The other two remained, whose fee is entered at £2, 14s. each a month, and they appear to have been after Albany's departure[6] added to the trumpeters, of whom there were five Italians and Scots. Vincent Paris and Julian Rockett[7] seem, from their names, to have been Italians. After his return the number was increased to six, and the pay of each was £38, 10s. a year.[8] In two of the accounts they are called Italian trumpeters,[9] but as the name of one of these is George Forrest, they were probably of mixed nationality, but had acquired the name of Italians from Albany having introduced men of that nation.

There is difficulty in ascertaining the exact salary received by Albany as Governor, for the accounts do not contain all the payments made to him. But if the average is taken of four of these for which the periods are given from 1st July to 1st November 1515, from 1st March to 31st August 1516, from 12th October 1516 to 7th June 1517, and after his return, from 3rd December 1521 to 31st May 1822, the cost of his household per month was little short of £700, while the King's household expenses, we have seen, were at the rate of £127 per month. This did not include the wages of his servants or the fodder of his horses, or numerous payments for wine and sundries.[1] From the Treasurer's Accounts we learn also that on 28th August 1517, £617 was paid for furnishing the ships with which he went to France, and that a personal payment of £2250 was made to him. The whole sums drawn by him from the revenues of Scotland must therefore have been large, and can scarcely have increased his popularity. Yet up to the time when these accounts close, so great were the troubles caused by the dissensions amongst the nobles that the most impartial witness we have, the poet Dunbar, in a poem written in 1520 or 1521, ex-

[1] These Accounts prove that correct Household Books were kept by Albany, the King, and the Queen. There is, indeed, an entry of such Household Books being bought for the King and Albany, pp. 104–203; and the statement of the editor of the Household Books of James V., published by the Bannatyne Club in 1836, which begins in 1525, that "we have no evidence of the existence of such a record of an earlier date" is evidently erroneous.

—it would seem that pecuniary considerations were at least amongst the motives which detained him in France.

If we attempt from the entries in the accounts to form an estimate of the character and conduct of Albany, we should conjecture that he was a man fond of pleasure and of sport, with expensive and luxurious habits, yet capable of active exertion ; that he came to Scotland, as Mary Stuart did fifty years later, accustomed to French fashions and modes of life ; tempted by the position of Governor and the chance of succession to the Crown ; but when the position became more perilous, as De La Bastie's murder showed, and the chance lessened as James grew older and stronger, he began to think the game was not worth the candle, and that life in France was more agreeable. He only returned for two short visits, and in the second, which lies beyond this period, his military failure in the siege of Werk, due partly to himself and partly to the unwillingness of the nobles to support him, led him to abandon the attempt to govern Scotland. It must be reckoned in his favour that he promoted the interests of Scotland abroad, and that when James came to manhood and assumed the reins of power, Albany gave him steady support.

James Hamilton, first Earl of Arran, the rival of Albany from his royal descent, and of Angus from his position as a noble, is one of the most perplexing characters of the period, and any light is welcome which can be thrown upon his erratic life. In the preceding reign he was one of the ambassadors who concluded the marriage between James IV. and Margaret Tudor, and distinguished himself in the tournaments on the occasion of the marriage, as well as by his single combat with De La Bastie in 1507. To his prowess, royal blood, and services in this embassy he owed the title of Arran, and the appointment of Justiciar within its bounds. As was natural in an island Earl fond of adventure, he had taken part in more than one expedition of the navy which James IV. fostered with such loving care. He sailed with Wood and Barton to reduce the Hebrides, and commanded the expedition which James sent to the aid of his uncle Hans of Denmark against the Swedes. On his return from an embassy to France through England, he had been seized and detained by Henry VII. When released at the beginning of the reign of Henry VIII., he continued to hold a high place in the esteem of James, who unfortunately entrusted him, instead of one of the more practical seamen in his service, with the command of the maritime forces sent of the fleet he had built to co-operate in the Campaign of Flodden. The ships had separate Captains, and Gordon of Letterfurry, a son of Lord Huntly, is sometimes called the Admiral, but Arran from his rank apparently had the chief command. Instead of fulfilling his instructions he crossed first to Carrick-Fergus, which he stormed to no purpose, then to Ayr, where his men played themselves for forty days,[1] and finally to France, in defiance of an attempt made by Sir Andrew Wood to supersede him before he set sail. When the Duke of Albany was summoned to Scotland after the death of James IV., he sent as his representatives, De La Bastie, Arran, Lord Fleming, and the Lyon King, who landed on the west coast on 3rd November 1513. At the Exchequer in Edinburgh on 14th July there is an entry in the Bute Accounts of a receipt by Arran for 46 pounds delivered to him in respect of his expenses "when he lay in the ships before Bute on his way to the King of France,"[2] which must refer to his voyage in the previous year. The largest of his ships the St Michael, the pride of Scotland, was sold by Albany in the Chatelet of Paris on 2nd April 1514 to the French King for 40,000 crowns of Tours,[1] but the "James and the Margaret" returned, as we learn from the present accounts.[2] Although he connived at the escape of Hume the Chamberlain, who was his brother-in-law, Arran afterwards took part with Albany against that powerful clan, and next appears in the accounts in connection with his expedition to the Borders in the Autumn of 1517, to avenge the murder of his old rival in the lists, De La Bastie. He received from Barton, the Comptroller, certain corn and malt during the time of his government and residence at Edinburgh (tempore sui regiminis et residentie),[3] on the mandate of the Lords of Council, and £8, 9s. was paid for the freight and expenses of two cannons at the time when the Earl of Arran, Regent, was in the Castle of Eddrington. The cannons only went to North Berwick,[4] and were sent back from there to Edinburgh. Three scaling-ladders were also despatched to him for the siege of Wedderburn. The surrender of the Castles of the Humes and their adherents, and their flight to England, accounts for the return of the cannon. The title of Regent given to Arran, confirms the fact that for a short time he became virtually Governor of Scotland after the death of De La Bastie, though his position was always contested and his power of short duration. He was also at this period nominated Warden of the Marches[1] in room of De La Bastie, and chosen Provost of Edinburgh. From a later account we learn that his natural son, Sir James Hamilton of Finnart, was Custodier of the Castle of Hume, and received the large fee of £692 for its custody from 1st October 1518 to the end of May 1520.[2] The Castle of Wedderburn was provisioned by order of Arran, and was also held by Sir James Hamilton. The appointments to these offices naturally raised the jealousy of Angus, and the contest for the possession of Edinburgh and its chief magistracy led to the street fight of Cleanse the Causeway on 30th April 1520, in which the party of Arran was driven out of the town. Arran and his son James fled down a close, and seizing a collier's horse forded the North Loch at an obscure place. From an entry of a payment of £30 to prepare a ship for Arran to go on an embassy to the French King,[3] it appears possible that he went at this time to France to hasten the return of Albany, a fact hitherto unknown. If so, he came back with Albany. He was again one of the Council of Regency when Albany went to France in 1522. It had been more easy to gain him than Angus, for the Hamiltons, like the Stuarts, and unlike the Douglases, supported the French connection. He lived till 1529, but his intrigues with the Queen Dowager and Henry VIII., his apparent reconciliation with Angus, his conflict with the Earl of Lennox, whose slaughter, by his son Sir James, he lamented, and the part he took in the forfeiture of the Douglases when James emancipated himself from their control, lie beyond the period of this volume. Wolsey, a shrewd judge of men, seems to have grasped his character when he said "Angus was worth five Earls of Arran."

The name of Angus naturally appears less frequently in the Rolls. As husband of the Queen Mother he stood very near the Crown, which his ancestors had more than once attempted, but always failed to wrest from the Stuarts. His destiny was to make the last throw for the Douglases in the game in which the Crown was the stake. After his quarrel with the Queen, he still continued to represent his ancient and powerful family, and for a time was leader of the English party amongst the nobles. But throughout this period he was in opposition to the party in possession of the government, and it was not till after the final withdrawal of Albany that he secured his object and obtained the custody of the King, and through it the chief place in the government.

In the Accounts of Bute in 1514 for the previous year we find, however, an entry of a payment of £30 to Angus and a similar value in marts to his grandfather old Bell-the-Cat.[1] The first of these payments is said to have been made under the Queen's precept, and possibly represents the commencement of their intimacy. The only other reference to Angus is the indirect one of the non-payment[2] in 1522 of the Queen's jointure from her estates, already noticed, which is described as due to the disturbance of the country, by which is really meant the conduct of Angus, who did all he could to prevent its payment.

The leading Churchmen of this period were Andrew Forman, Bishop of Moray and Archbishop of Bourges, who became during it Archbishop of St Andrews, James Beaton, Archbishop of Glasgow, and Gavin Douglas, who after many struggles for preferment, through the influence of the Queen, after her marriage to his nephew Angus, at last obtained in 1516 the Bishopric of Dunkeld, of which he had to take possession by force. In 1522 he was compelled to take refuge in England, and in the same year he died an exile at London, continuing till his last hours to incite Henry VIII. against his native country. The name of Gavin Douglas does not appear in the Accounts, but the explanation of this omission is the same as the rarity of references to Angus. They were in opposition, and unsuccessful opposition, to the recognised government. Almost all the other Prelates of Scotland were devoted partisans of the French interest.

[1] Pages 21, 22. [2] Page 459.

The earlier portion of the life of Andrew Forman has been already traced by Mr Dickson in the Preface to the Treasurer's Accounts, and by the present writer in the Preface to the last volume of the Exchequer Rolls. He died in 1522, and we catch some glimpses of his closing years in the present volume. From the account of the Granges of Dunbar, of which he was lessee in 1514, we learn that he still continued Bishop of Moray on 20th July of that year, for the account recites his pluralities, and styles him "Andrew, Archbishop of Bourges, Bishop of Moray, Commendator of the Monasteries of Dryburgh and Pittenweem in Scotland, and of Cottingham in England, and Tacksman of the Granges of Dunbar.[1] In the course of this year he became Archbishop of St Andrews as the result of a compromise of the rival claims, and through the powerful support he received from Leo x., Albany, and Hume the Chamberlain. On his appointment to St Andrews he resigned the Sees of Moray and Bourges and the Commendatorship of Dryburgh, but in 1517 he received from Albany the richer and more convenient Commendatorship of Dunfermline. James Hepburn, a brother of Prior Hepburn, was promoted to the See of Moray, the Prior himself received a pension of of 1000 merks out of the rents of Dunfermline, and his nephew became Prior of Coldingham. James Beaton got the Abbey of Arbroath of which James

Douglas was deprived ; James Ogilvy, whose name frequently occurs in the present Accounts, that of Dryburgh ; a Hamilton, that of Kilwinning ; and a Gordon, kinsman of Lord Huntly, was made Bishop of Aberdeen. In this all-round distribution of the vacant benefices Gavin Douglas was alone left out in the cold, and we can understand the indignation of the Douglas, though unworthy of the Poet. As no further account for the Granges of Dunbar appears, it is probable Forman's tack came to an end by these farms falling within the Queen's Conjunct Infeftment, a view which is supported by another entry[1] in 1518, proving that Margaret Tudor received £81, 13s. 4d. from the Domain lands of Dunbar in part-payment of the rents due to her. Forman's possession of the lands had been combined with the holding of the Castle of Dunbar, and his brother Robert, the Dean of Glasgow, who acted as one of the Auditors of Exchequer and Commissioners to let Crown lands, handed over that fortress to De La Bastie on his arrival in Scotland. Robert also acted as Andrew Forman's agent in receiving various sums due to the Abbey of Dunfermline.[2] His eldest brother Sir John Forman continued to be the King's First Porter, as in the former reign, and his fee was paid by the Bishop out of the rents of Dunbar.[3] An entry in the same account of the payment of £20 for Ferquhard Macintosh is worthy of notice, as showing that the head of the Clan Chattan,[1] who had rebelled against James IV. in 1491, and had been a prisoner at least since 1495, still languished in the dungeons of Dunbar. This captivity for so many years was a severer punishment than death to a Highland Chief. Archbishop Forman, who, as was noticed in the last volume,[2] had acquired the favour of Leo X. on a visit to Rome, had been kept in expectation of the Cardinalate which had been promised him by Julius II. as far back as 1511. He never attained that dignity, but was appointed Legatus a Latere[3] by Leo X. The carefully graduated hierarchy of the Roman Church was an admirable instrument, skilfully used, to preserve the loyalty and keep alive the ambition of the high ecclesiastics. Forman died just after the close of the present Accounts, and was buried at Dunfermline. He does not rank among the great prelates of Scotland, though it deserves to be noticed that he issued a series of reforming statutes relative to the Church,[4] which would have been more effective had they been enforced by his own example. A Scotchman by birth, he had become a foreigner in feeling and interest. The Letters of General Naturalisation of all Scotchmen in France, granted by Louis XII. in November 1513, were procured at his instance. They freed his countrymen from the odious "droit d'aubaine," and enabled them to hold offices and lands and to succeed to movable estate in France as if they were natives. But his chief aim in life was his personal and family aggrandisement.

James Beaton, who succeeded him in the Primacy, was during the period of these Accounts Archbishop of Glasgow. His early progress from step to step of the ecclesiastical ladder has been already traced in the Preface to the last volume, and the present notice is confined to the new matter supplied by the present one.

As ambitious, though not so avaricious as Forman, and a younger and more active man, Beaton naturally figures more largely in the present Accounts. He had been made Chancellor in or before the Parliament of 26th November 1513, as appears from the Rolls of Parliament,[1] and not in 1515, after the arrival of Albany, as has been stated by several writers, who have omitted to observe that he was then merely restored to the office. Immediately after the Queen's marriage to Angus, that nobleman and the Queen finding him at Perth forcibly deprived him of the Great Seal, which was given to Gavin Douglas. The Archbishop "in a fury," according to Leslie, occupied Edinburgh, and "of this spunk kindlet sik a low that Angus and the Quene tuke thaim to thair fute and fled to the bordowris[1] of England," but they must soon after have returned to Stirling. On Albany's arrival, Beaton became again Chancellor, and was, as we have seen, gratified by the presentation to the rich Abbacy of Arbroath. During Albany's stay he took a large part in the government, and his conduct in the tumult which ended in the fight of Cleanse the Causeway has been already described. As Archbishop, he distinguished himself by the magnificence of his additions to the ecclesiastical buildings and his patronage of learning. Major dedicates one of his prefaces to him in the luxuriant eloquence of mediæval Latin. Soon after Albany's return in 1522 he was translated to St Andrews as successor to Archbishop Forman.

The Rolls in the present Volume enable us to fill in another aspect of his activity, and show the important part he played in the administration of the royal revenues. He appears throughout the Accounts as Chamberlain of Fife, though being a busy man, these were rendered and no doubt kept by his deputies, Andrew Matheson and Sir Lawrence Alexanderson. In the first, rendered on 2nd August 1514, he accounts for the large sum of £1186, 8s. 11d., besides corn and cain. He discharges himself by payments of certain customary ecclesiastical charges, the upkeep and repairs of the Castle of Falkland, the fees of certain officers, and the expenses of the Queen and young King when at Falkland, leaving a balance of £283, 3s. 8d. He himself received £20[1] for the trouble of collecting the rents in "that disturbed time" and other £20 as his fee. The balance of the corn and other rents in kind expended for similar purposes was 6 chalders 5 bolls 3 firlots and $2\frac{1}{2}$ pecks wheat, 8 chalders 2 firlots $\frac{1}{4}$ of a peck barley, 5 chalders 8 bolls malt,[2] 7 chalders 2 bolls and 3 firlots oats, 6 bolls oatmeal, one wild boar, four barrels of lard, 58 geese, 500 capons, and 769 poultry.[3] In his next account, of 7th August 1516, which is for two years, the debit side of his account is £1249, 10s. 9d., and the credit £1425, 13s. 2d., leaving a deficiency of £176, 2s. 5d.[4] The deficiency was caused by the heavy expenditure for the fortification and garrisoning of Falkland against the Queen already referred to. But the year 1515 must have been a good harvest in Fife, for Beaton is able, by sales of corn to realise £284, 13s. 4d., out of which he was allowed £66, 16s. 10d. in payment of the deficiency in money rents, leaving a balance remaining in his hands of £207, 16s. 5d.[5] There was also a considerable sum in suspense from the augmentation of the feu-farms, amounting to £243, 2s., for three years preceding the account for which the farmers were to be summoned. From this account[6] we learn that there had been an audit appointed at Perth, to which the Rolls were sent, but which had not been held, doubtless owing to the disturbances consequent on Beaton being deprived of the Great Seal. In the next account, in 1517, the balance had much improved, and was in money £569, 3s.,[1] besides a small amount of victual, although the rents of Fife had to bear some of the expenses of Albany's visits to Falkland. This improvement was due to the levy of the grassums and entries of the tenants in feu-farms. In 1518 the balance in money had risen to £686, 12s. 11d.[2] besides corn, and in the last account, rendered on 26th February 1522, for three years, it was substantially the same.[3] It has been thought worth while to follow these accounts, with some minuteness, at the risk of tediousness, in order to show their accuracy, and also that Fife was one of the most productive parts of the royal estates, in part because of its agricultural fertility, but largely owing to the system of feu-farming adopted there.

Beaton and the leading ecclesiastics of this time have been severely judged. Their character indeed was very different from that of the apostles, of whom they claimed to be successors, and whose virtues they are still believed by some to have transmitted. But they were often the most capable men of business of their age, and if they amassed wealth it was because they had the peculiar talents necessary for making and keeping money. In Beaton's case there is no sign, as we have seen in Andrew Stewart, Bishop of Caithness, and some other officials, of unfaithfulness in discharge of his duty as a Royal officer.

The amount of business Beaton discharged must, even when aided by deputies, have been enormous. He had to administer his own See and the estates of the Abbey of Arbroath. Besides the offices of Chancellor and Chamberlain of Fife, he served constantly as an Auditor of Exchequer and a Commissioner for letting the Crown lands. Not content with ecclesiastical and civil duties, we have found him prepared to head the garrison of Falkland, and marching with his followers to Edinburgh, ready to fight, though forced to fly at the fray of Cleanse the Causeway. But Flodden had given a severe lesson. The times were changing, and even the Church changed with the times. Although his nephew David the Cardinal fortified his castle at St Andrews, he died without striking a blow. James Beaton was the last of the martial prelates of Scotland.

Alexander, Lord Hume, whose long life was traced in the last volume, appears in this volume of the Rolls only as witness to Charters in 1511 and 1512,[1] and in the Account he rendered as receiver of the Forest of Ettrick on 14th July 1514 from 30th July 1513.[2] Before the next audit on 30th July 1515, the intrigues of Lord Dacre and the Queen-Mother had led Hume, who had been instrumental in the recall of Albany to Scotland, to go over to the English interest, and plot with the Queen and Angus against the Regent. By an agreement on 11th May 1515 between him and the Queen, he was to receive 3000 merks on condition of supporting her and Angus. He had refused, when ordered by Albany at the close of the Parliament in the end of July, to arrest Sir George Douglas, the brother of Angus, and fled from Edinburgh to Newark, attended by a single servant. On 24th August he wrote to Dacre with an urgent postscript, "Gyff ever your master would take his tym of Scotland, now or never."[1] No help came from England, and Hume, after razing his own castle to the ground[2] to save it from Albany, fled across the Border, where he was well received by Dacre. Albany offered terms, and induced Hume to meet him at Dunglas, where he was thrown into a dungeon, and released only on condition of going into exile for three years. Albany entrusted him to the custody of his brother-in-law Arran, and that nobleman not only connived at his escape, but went with him[3] from Edinburgh to Wooler.

On 15th October 1515, Angus, Arran, and Hume entered into a mutual bond against Albany, and to deliver the King and the Duke of Ross from his custody. In April of the next year, the English

King still offering no substantial aid, Angus and Hume became reconciled to Albany[1] through the mediation of Forman, whose claim to the Archbishopric of St Andrews he had favoured, and returned to their estates, but Hume having, along with his brother William and Ker of Ferniehirst, with singular rashness a second time put himself in Albany's power by attending the Parliament which met in Edinburgh on 15th September, they were seized, tried for treason, and found guilty. The Humes were executed on 8th and 9th October, and their heads placed on the walls of the Tolbooth.[2] Ker escaped. The charge of treason at Flodden, though made by popular rumour and adopted by some historians, was unfounded, for the Humes left as many dead on the field as any other family. But the intrigue with Dacre was beyond dispute, and might well be deemed treason by Albany and his friends. The real cause of the fall of the Humes is given by Major: "I often say to my own countrymen that there is naught more perilous than unduly to trust great houses, and most of all if their territory be in the extremities of the kingdom, or the men themselves are high-spirited, for the Borderers are constantly practised in active exercise, and the life of a soldier is natural to them, and so they come to place their life in arms, and judge they shall be able to find an escape from their enemies in time of need. . . . More than four years from the present writing we saw the Lord Hume, for a like cause, lose both his property and his life."[1] Major gives as other instances the fall of the Earls of March, Douglas, and Ross. Nor were these to be the last examples. The Douglases of the Angus line and the Hepburns, who from Lords of Hailes became Earls of Bothwell, and from friends had become rivals of the Humes, were to climb to a still giddier height before the fall of Angus, the spouse of a Queen-Dowager, and of Bothwell the consort of a Queen-Regent. The account now presented, as well as those in the former volume, shows how powerful Hume had become. Besides being Great Chamberlain he had accumulated the Wardenships of the Middle, East, and West Marches. He had a fee of £300 for the latter offices, £40 for his fee as Chamberlain, and £16 as Keeper of Newark, while as Receiver of the Forest of Ettrick he got £80 for collecting the rents.[2] That Forest was part of the Queen's Jointure, or Conjunct Infeftment, which accounts for almost all the entries in the discharge side of the single account rendered for it having been made by authority of the Queen. Several of the payments were made to the Queen's servants: amongst them, two of £40 to Alexander Crawford, Preceptor of St Anthony at Leith, as her Almoner. The whole receipts of the Forest amounted to £2781, 12s. 9d.,[1] of which £108, 16s. 1d. was arrears, but only £18 of this seem to have reached the Queen's purse. The rest was spent in fees of officials, or remitted to the tenants, or allowed to the accountant himself on account of failure in rents.

In the Preface to the last volume the history of the family of the Bartons or Bertons, of their founder John, a merchant-trader of Leith, and his son Andrew, the famous sea-captain, was traced.[2] Another, probably the youngest son Robert, is a conspicuous figure in the present Volume. He had taken part in the last reign in some of the seafaring enterprises of his brother Andrew, and had provided the crew for "The Cuckoo," which conveyed Perkin Warbeck to Ireland. He had also served the Danish Monarch.[3] Returning to the Scottish Royal service, probably as a merchant-trader, he acquired the lands of Over Berntoun or Barnton, which included the village of Cramond in Midlothian, by gift from James IV. in 1507, and those of Balhengie, Ardester, and other lands in Dumbartonshire, and also the barony of Kirkbuddo in Forfarshire,[4] by purchase from the Earl of Crawford in 1508.[5] His skill in accounts probably recommended him for the office of Comptroller, which we find him holding from 1516 to the close of these Accounts, and as such he renders his accounts on 3rd September 1517, 27th August 1518, and 21st May 1522,[1] from which we can correct the statement of Crawford in his Officers of State that he only became Comptroller in 1524. During the same period he also acted as Custumar of Edinburgh, and was constantly a Commissioner for leasing the Crown lands. The wages of the Comptroller and five servants, including horse money for a year, as appears from one of these accounts, were £170, 10s. One of the risks to which a Comptroller was exposed is shown by an allowance made to him of £23 for "fals plakkis negligently received by him." That he still took part in naval affairs is perhaps indicated by an entry, in the Account of his predecessor Jardine of Applegarth, of salt marts and pork delivered to him to provision the King's ships at Dumbarton and Dunbar, and by a reference to 500 merks allowed him in 1522, that sum having been taken by the Spaniards when the Black Bark of Abbeville,[2] belonging to him, was captured. Barton stated that this money had been sent by him to the Governor in this vessel, which shows both that remittances were made to Albany when out of Scotland, and that Barton was in his confidence, as might be inferred from his holding the office of Comptroller during Albany's government. On 6th March 1529 he became Lord High Treasurer and Master of the Mint. He died in 1538, leaving a son, John, who took the name of Mowbray, from his marriage to the heiress of Barnbougle. Barton was on friendly terms with Margaret Tudor, who calls him "my faithful Comptroller John Barton," and acknowledges she was indebted to him "for very sustenance."[1] James Douglas describes him as "ane very pyrett and sey-revare Comptroller." There seems little doubt he was a good public official, but an official of Albany could not be good in the eyes of Douglas.

Some Minor Historical Persons who appear in the Accounts.

Some minor historical characters or persons occasionally mentioned in the Accounts, and known in history, deserve to be brought on the stage to enable us to realise the social and political condition of Scotland between 1513 and 1522. I shall notice the references to a few members of the nobility, or of noble families, who played a secondary, though not unimportant, part at this period; to some of the men of letters of a time when Scotland was passing through the Renaissance to the Reformation; and lastly, to the rise of the new professions of Law and Medicine, which were both to become so learned, and the former so powerful in its future annals. A brief reference to the position of women engaging in business and holding offices, illustrated by examples from the Rolls or other record sources in the beginning of the 16th century, may perhaps not be deemed out of place in a Preface written towards the close of the 19th century, of which it is one of the new characteristics that women are beginning to take the further step of entering the professions.

The Highlands of the North and West were kept, we have seen, in subjection to the Royal authority greatly owing to the influence of the Earls of Argyle and Huntly, who were slowly but surely rising to the position which gave the chief of the former House the name of "The Macallum More," and the head of the latter, that of "The Cock of the North."

Colin Campbell, third Earl of Argyle, continued the hereditary policy of his grandfather Archibald, Chancellor of Scotland under James III., and his father Archibald, both Chancellor and Master of the Household of James IV., by supporting the Royal authority in the Western Highlands and Isles, and thereby increasing his own estates and influence. He succeeded after his father's death at Flodden, and undertook to put down the rebels of Argyle.[1] For this purpose he was granted the custody of the castles of Dunoon, Cowal, and Cairnbulg in Mull.[2] An allowance was also made him for keeping eight prisoners, as pledges no doubt, in these castles.[3] This method of holding a chief or his eldest son as a hostage was a favourite and sometimes successful method of taming the wild clans and their fierce heads. Another mode of winning over the clans was by granting protection to the loyal chiefs, as was done in the case of John M'Ian of Ardnamurchan and others, who are described as "servants to Colin, Erle of Argyle." In respect of the disturbances in Kintyre consequent on the defeat at Flodden, he was freed from accounting for the rents of that Lordship for the ten years from 1511 to 1521, upon his statement that he[4] could not recover them, and his promise that he would faithfully collect them in future. It is specially noted that this promise was given by proxy, as he could not attend the Exchequer in person,[5] being probably engaged in the arduous task he had undertaken. He was able to account for part of Glendaruel, a portion of the lands of Dunoon, for one term's rents before Flodden, and after it for nine years and one term. Roseneath, now one of the most valuable portions of the Argyle estates, had been set to his father in feu-farm, and the feu-duties were paid. But of certain of the rents due, a remission was made for three years and one term, being the period of Albany's absence in France.[1] Argyle was Justiciar of Scotland, and as Master of the King's Household, an office which must have been chiefly titular, he received eight lasts of herring, probably for the Royal use, in 1516.[2] He was married in his father's lifetime to Lady Janet Gordon, daughter of Alexander, third Earl of Huntly, so that the representatives of the Royal interest in the West and North Highlands were closely connected. Both possessed an authority in their Highland homes which was almost regal.

Alexander, third Earl of Huntly, one of the few nobles who saved their lives at Flodden, became the King's Lieutenant north of the Forth. In the present volume he renders an account for the Earldom of Moray, of which he was Chamberlain in 1514,[3] 1515,[4] and 1516,[5] through his Deputy, John Calder, a hereditary servant of the Gordon family. After 1516 Moray disappears from the Accounts, owing to the admission of James Stewart, a bastard of James IV., to the Earldom in the Parliament of 1517. Huntly was also Lessee or Tacksman of the Lordships of Brechin and Nevare, and renders his account for their tack-duties during the whole period of the Accounts. A portion of these were employed in payments to the religious houses of Cupar, Brechin, and Restennott, and the balance was accounted for to the Comptroller. He was besides Receiver for the Lordships of Strathdee or Deeside and Cromar, which are accounted for to the Comptroller throughout these Accounts.[1] Huntly was Hereditary Sheriff both of Inverness and Aberdeen, and as such we find him paying over to the Comptroller in 1518 the escheat of Hay of Ardendrach, Mowat of Balquille, David Lyon, and their accomplices, for the murder of Alexander Bannerman of Watterston.[2] His brother, Adam Gordon, had married the heiress to the Sutherland estates,[3] and Huntly himself seems, from a reference in this volume,[4] to have held for a time the Chamberlainship of Ross and Ardmanach. But that office was afterwards conferred on the Earl of Athole,[5] and passed to Janet, Dowager Countess of Athole.[6] The entries in the accounts of the Earl and Countess of Athole as Chamberlains of Ross enable us to correct a statement of Douglas in his Peerage relating to the Athole family. Countess Janet does not appear in his genealogy, but she must have been the widow of John Stewart, first Earl of Athole, who died in 1512, or of John, the second Earl, who perished at Flodden; probably of the latter.[7] John, the third Earl, held the Earldom from 1513 to 1547. John, the second Earl, is said by Douglas to have married Lady Mary Campbell, daughter of Archibald, second Earl of Argyle, and perhaps the mistake is as to her christian name. Huntly himself married, as his first wife, Lady Janet, daughter of John, first Earl of Athole. It will be again observed how closely the ruling families were connected by intermarriage. This connection probably explains a somewhat obscure entry in the Rolls of 1521,[1] which refers to a surrender of the Lordships of Ross and Ardmanach by John, formerly Earl of Athole, first to Alexander, Earl of Huntly, and "now to the Countess of Athole, relict and executrix of the said Earl." Why the Earl of Huntly should have been interposed between the late Earl of Athole and his widow it is not, however, easy to understand.

John, first Lord Drummond, already an old man at the commencement of these Accounts, had taken through life a position beyond his rank as one of the smaller barons, owing to the relations of his family with the Royal House through Anabella, the wife of Robert III., and with several noble families. He appears in the Accounts as Chamberlain of Strathearn,[2] to which he was appointed by the Queen in room of Peter Scott in 1514.[3] To his original lordship of Stobhall on the banks of Tay, near Cargill, he had added the nucleus of what afterwards became the Earldom of Perth, and he had also built the original keep of Drummond Castle about 1487.[1] The offices of Seneschal or Steward and Coroner of Strathearn, in the abeyance of the old earldom, gave him the chief power in that district, and he distinguished himself both in military and diplomatic affairs during the reign of James IV. The family historian, Lord Strathallan, is probably right in describing him as a general favourite. The beauty of his daughters led to the sad and still unexplained fate of Margaret, mistress of James IV., who, with her sisters Euphemia, wife of Lord Fleming, and Sibilla, died on the same day in 1502. Another daughter, Elizabeth, married George, Master of Angus, eldest son of Bell-the-Cat, and was mother of Archibald, sixth Earl of Angus. Beatrice married James, first Earl of Arran, who was thus, by his wife, uncle of his rival. Near kinship or affinity sometimes led to jealousies and feuds instead of friendship and alliances. The remaining daughter, Annabella, became the wife of William, first Earl of Montrose. Lord Drummond had abetted the unfortunate match of his grandson Angus with Margaret Tudor, and he took part in their revolutionary proceedings at Perth in 1514, when Beaton was deprived of the Great Seal, and Cumming, the Lyon King, who had summoned Angus before the Council, was struck by Lord Drummond. For this offence Lord

Drummond was, after Albany's return, sent to Blackness Castle, and was tried and condemned to death by Parliament on 15th July 1515, but having made peace with Albany, he was pardoned, though a portion at least of his estates was escheated, and was not restored till 1537.[1] He died at Drummond Castle in 1518 or 1519. The references to him in the Rolls illustrate the events of the latter part of his life. At the audit on 15th July 1516, Peter, the son of Patrick Scott, Chamberlain of Strathearn, who had been appointed to the office by Albany, was discharged in respect of the rents for Whitsunday and Martinmas 1514, for which Lord Drummond, who had superseded Scott before Whitsunday 1514, was to be summoned.[2] In the account audited on 28th July 1517, Lord Drummond, who had now been restored to the office of Chamberlain, accounts for the rents of these terms.[3] He compounded with the auditors for the balance due by him of £407, 11s. 8d. by a payment of £200 to the Comptroller, and an allowance made to him of £207, 11s. 8d. for his fee as Keeper of the Castle of Stirling and the person of the King, as well as for "certain other causes moving the auditors,"[4] which doubtless means the terms of his arrangement with Albany. In the Audit of 1522 Peter Scott again appears as Chamberlain of Strathearn,[5] and renders the account from 4th August 1518. This probably fixes the date of Lord Drummond's death, which Douglas states in his Peerage as having occurred in 1519, but without voucher for that date.

The two Gavin Dunbars, scions of the great but fallen House of Dunbar, Earl of March, both appear in the Rolls. The elder was at this period Archdeacon of St Andrews, and Clerk both of the Council and of the Register, offices which he had held in the preceding reign.[1] He acted as an Auditor in 1517[2] and 1518,[3] and as a Commissioner for letting Crown lands both when Archdeacon of St Andrews and after his elevation to the See of Aberdeen.[4] As he is still styled Archdeacon in the Crown Rentals of 16th July 1518,[5] we are able to correct the date of his appointment to that See, which has sometimes been placed in June of this year, but which really took place not earlier than the end of July. The heraldic ceilings of the Cathedral of Machar at Old Aberdeen were one of the many works of this Prelate, and the learned editor of the Lacunar Aberdonense assigns 1520 as their date, and conjectures that Cumying of Inveralochy, the Lyon King, was consulted as to the blazonry.[6]

His nephew and namesake, the younger Gavin, who became so famous as Archbishop of Glasgow and Chancellor, the far-sighted Prelate through whose influence the Court of Session was at last instituted in 1532, appears only once in the Accounts as receiving £50, one-half of his fee as Preceptor of the King. He is also mentioned in the Treasurer's Accounts, where he is called the King's Master, and received on 16th February 1517 nine pounds to buy necessaries for the King's chamber, and three pounds for 'expenses made by him in reparaling it' on 28th August 1517. It was this office which led to his subsequent rise. In his as in other cases, the tutor of the youth became the counsellor of the manhood of the Prince.

Two notable members of the Hamilton family, closely related to its head, appear, as might be anticipated, in the Accounts—Sir Patrick Hamilton of Kincavil, the bastard brother of Arran, and father of Patrick Hamilton the martyr, and Sir James Hamilton of Finnart, the bastard son of the same Peer. Both had been legitimated. The passage between them at Cleanse the Causeway, where Sir Patrick refuted his nephew's reproach of cowardice by his death, has been already referred to. Sir James lived to be the friend and a trusted counsellor of James v., but died on the block in 1540 on a charge of high treason. The king is said never to have forgiven himself for this death, which was one of the causes of the melancholy of the last years of his life. In the Rolls, Sir Patrick appears chiefly as Custodier of Blackness Castle, and for a short time between 3rd August 1513 and 1st November 1515 as one of the Receivers-General, along with James Kincragy.[1] He was allowed £50 in the accounts of 1518 for the custody of George Douglas, the brother of Angus, in Blackness Castle.[2] Sir James was sent in charge of George Douglas when he was exiled to France in 1517,[3] and after the seizure of the castles of the Humes by his father, Arran, in 1518, was given the custody of Hume and Wedderburn, his fee for which from 1st October 1518 to June 1520 appears in the accounts.[4] The enmity between the two illegitimate kinsmen is perhaps explained by Sir Patrick having been put in the entail of the estates of Arran after Sir James. Both, in spite of Sir James's charge against his uncle, seem to have had the hot blood and uncertain temper of the Hamiltons.

Robert Borthwick, possibly a relative of Lord Borthwick, one of the King's custodiers, continues, as in the former reign, to be the practical head of the Artillery, and his position became more important through no successor being appointed to Lord Sinclair as titular Master of Artillery.[5] He received wages as founder or maker of cannons,[6] and for guarding the King, along with six other artillerymen, in the Castle of Edinburgh from June 1517 to March 1521.[7] The rents of half of the Mains of Balincreif were remitted to him for his services to James IV. and James V.[1]

There was not the same activity in the making or purchase of artillery as in the reign of James IV. Still, we meet with notices of serpentines and culverins being bought towards the close of James IV.'s reign by the Bishop of Caithness for the defence of Dingwall Castle and Redcastle,[2] and of pas volantis, culverins, and bombards, with the necessary powder, being provided by James Beaton, Archbishop of Glasgow, for the defence of Falkland,[3] and also of five "serpentines" bought in Ayr.[4] There is a curious reference to the oxen required to draw the guns, in the compensation paid for sixteen oxen, two teams of eight, the usual number for a plough, which had perished at Flodden.[5] Two cannons were sent to North Berwick[6] for the use of Arran in his expedition against the Humes, but were returned to the Castle of Edinburgh, and six "falcons" were despatched to Albany when he advanced to the Border in 1522.[7] It may be presumed that it was partly the terror of these new machines, as they were commonly called, which led to the speedy surrender of the castles of the Humes.

As William Dunbar was the representative poet of the reign of James IV., so was Sir David Lyndsay in of that of James v. The life of Gavin Douglas fell between the two periods. His ornate and learned verse, though some have thought it superior as poetry, is certainly less characteristic than that of either his older or younger contemporary. The period with which we are concerned, and the reign of James v. generally, was a less poetic age than that of his predecessor. The prophecy of Lindsay, that Bellienden would excel Quintyn and Kennedy, the poets of the preceding generation, was a sign of the decline of poetry. History and the classical authors were now more studied, and such poetry as was produced was the offspring of these studies rather than of natural genius. It was indeed a time of great learning amongst the circle, no doubt limited, of Scottish scholars, who not only translated the classics earlier in some cases than the English, but used Latin almost as if it were their mother-tongue. Of a few of these poets and scholars this volume of the Rolls affords incidental notices.

The notices of the gradual rise of Sir David Lyndsay in the Royal service, which the Accounts furnish, have been already referred to. It is from his poems rather than from such sources as those with which we are here dealing that we get the liveliest picture of the minority of James v. The most painstaking antiquarian research only brings to light the skeleton of a past age. The contemporary poet makes it live again and illuminates it by a flash, as when Lyndsay tells of his employments at the Court of the infant King :—

"Quhow, as ane chapman beris his pak,
I bere thy Grace upon my bak,
And sumtymes strydlingis on my nek,
Dansand with mony bend and bek.
The first sillabis that thow did mute
Was Pa, Da, Syrr; upon the lute
Than playit I twenty spryngis, perqueir,

Fra play thow leit me never rest,
Bot jynkartoun thow lufit ay best;
And ay, quhen thow come frome the scule,
Than I behuffit to play the fule."[1]

And in another passage :—

"Quhen thow wes young, I bure thee in myne arme
Full tenderlie, tyll thow begeuth to gang,
And in thy bed oft happit thee full warme,
With lute in hand, syne, sweetlie to thee sang;
Sumtyme in dansing, feiralie I flang,
And sumtyme, playand farsis on the flure,
And sumtyme, on myne office takkand care;

"And sumtyme, like ane feind, transfigurate,
And sumtyme, lyke the greislie gaist of Gye;

And sumtyme, dissagyist full pleasandlye.
So, sen thy birth, I have continewalye

And sumtyme, Seware, Coppare, and Carvoure.

"Thy purs maister and secreit Thesaurare

And of thy chalmer cheiffe cubiculare."

The present Accounts design Lyndsay always "Ostiarius" (Usher), but in the Treasurer's account

[1] The Complaynt to the King, lines 87 to 98.

he is called "Keepare of the Kingis person."[1] These verses show what his actual duties were.

In another poem he describes the revolution which, more than once attempted, at last succeeded, three years after the close of this volume :—

> "The Kyng was bot twelf yeirs of aige
> Quhen new rewlaris come, in thair raige
> For Commounweill makand no cair,
> Bot for thair proffeit singulair,
> Imprudentlie, lyk wytles fuilis,
> Thay tuke that young Prince frome the scullis,
> Quhare he, under obedience,
> Was lernand vertew and science,
> And haistelie pat in his hand
> The governance of all Scotland."

Here we see at a glance James in his tender years, and recognise how bad must have been the conduct and influence of the Queen Mother and of Angus, when they drove a reformer like Lyndsay, as they had driven a satirist like Dunbar, both naturally inclined to the English interest, into the opposite camp. Gavin Douglas, the poet of their camp, had ceased to write poetry after 1513, and had taken to ecclesiastical and political intrigues, so that we derive no light from his pen. The glowing portrait of Margaret Tudor in "The Palace of Honour" is an example of the poetic prophecies which history has proved false.

There are several references in the Accounts to John Ballintyne, or Ballantyne, or Ballendyne, who is described in the first two entries in 1515[2]

[1] 11th Sept. 1515; but also Usher, "Ostiarius," on 16th January 1517. Pitcairn, Criminal Trials, i. p. 261.

and 1518[1] as Clerk of the expenses of the King, and in the last in 1522[2] as an Officer of the Exchequer. This was the translator of Livy and of the Chronicles of Hector Boece, whose name is frequently written Bellenden, but who calls himself Ballantyne in the Prologue to the translation of Livy. He is throughout the Accounts styled Magister, a title given to a clerk who had taken his degree of Master of Arts, and in the poetical Prologue to his translation of Boece he says—

> "How that I was in service with the King,
> Put to his Grace in years tenderest,
> Clerk of his compts"—

a description which exactly fits the above entries. We know that he matriculated at St Andrews in 1508, so that he probably graduated in 1510 or 1511. It has been usually said, and though no authority is cited, it is probable enough, that he completed his divinity education at the Sorbonne. His literary labours did not begin till 1530, and both the Boece and Livy appear to have been completed in 1533,[3] when he had become Archdeacon of Moray and Canon of Ross. Lyndsay, in "The Testament and Complaynt of the Papingo," written about the same period, refers to him in the following lines:—

> "Bot, now of lait, is starte up haistelie
> Ane cunnying Clerk, quhilk wrytith craftelie
> Ane plant of Poeitis, callit Ballendyne, > Quhase ornat workis my wytt can nocht defyne.
> Gett he into the Courte auctoritie,
> He wyll precell Quintyn and Kennedie."

[1] Page 321.
[2] Page 460.
[3] Treasurer's Accounts, 26th July, 25th August 1533.

He died in Rome, according to Bale and Dempster, in 1550. It does not appear probable that he survived to 1587, an opinion which the writer in the Dictionary of National Biography erroneously attributes to Lord Dundrennan, who wrote the Introduction to the Translation of Boece. He has been sometimes confounded with his namesake Sir John Bellenden of Auchinoul, who became a Judge of the Court of Session in Queen Mary's reign, and died in 1577. Very probably they were related, and were both members of the same East Lothian family. Bellenden was undoubtedly one of the foremost men of letters of the reign of James v. He has been sometimes described as the King's Tutor, but there is no proof of this except the fact that he made his translations for the Royal benefit, and was paid for them out of the Exchequer. The date at which he ceased to act as Clerk of the King's accounts will probably be ascertained by the next volume of the Rolls, which may also explain whether his complaint—

> "Hie envy me from his service kest
> Be thame that had the Court in governing
> As bird bot plumes hevyest of his hert"— refers to Angus or to Albany. Most probably it refers to Angus, for it is in the main similar in tone to Lyndsay's Complaint against that noble. The production of two such translations as Douglas's Virgil and Bellenden's Livy before any similar translation appeared in English is a pregnant proof of the early activity of Scottish scholarship.

Hector Boece, or Bois, the Historian, and Principal of the King's College of Aberdeen, also an excellent Latinist, as is shown by his "Lives of the Bishops of Aberdeen," appears in the Accounts, but only in connection with payments to the College of Aberdeen, of which he had been made Principal by Bishop Elphinstone at the end of the 15th century. Of that good Bishop himself, to whom, and his successor Gavin Dunbar, Aberdeen owes so much, the notices are unfortunately scanty, but he is mentioned as Keeper of the Privy Seal in charters of 1511[1] and 1513,[2] and was present at the Exchequer in Edinburgh on 26th July 1513,[3] having declined, according to Leslie, the Archbishopric of St Andrews, which the Parliament had unanimously desired him to accept. He had been the patron and friend of Boece in his historical studies, and is even said to have written a History of Scotland, though he more probably only collected materials for one. It is worthy of notice that the men of letters of this period Elphinstone and Boece, Bellenden and Major, and a little later, Leslie and Buchanan, were specially devoted to historical inquiries. James, like his daughter, Queen Mary, was brought up on Livy, and history was deemed a necessary part of the education of those destined to govern.

A few references also occur in the present volume to Walter Chepman, whose printing press gave a stimulus to the literary activity of the age. Few writers even now despise the pleasure of seeing their works in print, and the pleasure must have been greater when printing was a new-found virgin art, still retaining some of the beauty of the illuminated manuscript. Yet, for some reason, Chepman soon ceased to print, and Scottish writers had to get their works printed at the press of Paris, and, at a later date, at that of London. Perhaps Chepman only took to printing as an amateur, and preferred in his later years the more lucrative pursuits of farming, wine dealing,[1] and merchandise. A new lease of the King's Meadow, near Edinburgh, was granted for nine years at a rent of £13, 6s. 8d. in favour of Chepman and his wife Agnes Cockburn, whom failing his son David, with leave "to plough the dry ground which was not fit for hay," and also to transfer the lease. On a former occasion, in the audit of 26th September 1516, he received an allowance for "the waste caused to his grain and hay through the army for the expedition against Dunglas." The King's Meadow was near the Figgate Burn, so close to Chepman's estate of Prestonfield.[2]

[1] The Household books of James v. prove that Chepman had acquired a tavern and merchant's booth in the High Street, and became a wine-merchant. See also (Great Seal Register, Edinburgh, 1542, No. 2612).

This expedition was probably that of Arran against the Castle of Hume, after the murder of De La Bastie, for it occurs before the date of that led by Albany himself after the execution of Lord Hume and his brother.

There is now frequent mention in the Accounts of surgeons, a profession to which the predilection of James IV. for an art which had many opportunities for its exercise in a warlike age had given an impetus. But the surgeon of this period was a physician as well, and the chief representative of the healing art, although leeches, physicians, and potingaries (apothecaries) are mentioned in Henryson's and Dunbar's poems. From the Records of the Burghs we gather that the surgical profession had sprung from the craft of barbers, one of whose duties from a remote time had been the use of the lancet, and, when necessary, of the knife, as well as the razor. The Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh possess a charter granted by the Town Council in 1505, and ratified by James IV. in 1506, to their predecessors the Surgeon Barbers.[1] The surgeons, however, who appear in the present accounts are not burghal but Royal surgeons, who had country districts placed under their care. They were paid

[1] This is printed in Colston's Incorporated Trades of Edinburgh, p. 1, and is dated 1st July 1505, and the ratification 13th Oct. 1506. by lands or fees from the Crown revenues, as parish doctors now receive allowances from the parish, and county sanitary inspectors from the county. The names of those in the present accounts are Henry Railston, who had an annual fee of 6 merks from the rents of Kere Lawmond, and Little and Meikle Lupas in Bute, during his life, for his services to the King and Queen;[1] John Watson, who received a fee of £21, 1s. 6d. under a precept from Albany in 1515,[2] and who may possibly have been the same person who took part in the jousting with another surgeon barber, celebrated in one of Sir David Lyndsay's poems; and Robert Kynnaird,[3] a surgeon of the King, who received an annual fee of £20 a year, half from the Treasurer and half from the Comptroller. In the same account John Murray, the King's barber, has a fee of £10.

A further step in the progress of the professior is marked by the payment of £24, 12s., under a grant of James IV., charged on the burgh of Cullen to a medical graduate as a Professor in the King's College or University of Aberdeen in 1515.[4] Doctor Kinghorn, the ambassador of the King of Denmark, we learn from the Danish archives to have been a Professor of Medicine at the University of Copenhagen, and afterwards Dean of Roskild. In 1542 the first notice of army surgeons occurs, four being sent to the Borders for "curing of all persons that happened to be hurt by Englishmen."[1] For the diseases which required the greatest skill, the medical faculty of Paris had still to be resorted to. Thus Patrick Panther, the King's Secretary, went to Paris when ill, and died there of fever, which accounts for many of the despatches of this period being written by his deputy, Taillefer. Even half a century later the services of the eminent Cardan had to be called in by Archbishop Hamilton; and Henry Sinclair, Bishop of Ross, the President of the Court of Session, had to resort to Paris for a surgical operation as natives of Ireland now resort to Edinburgh.

A slight trace of the first footprints of another profession, whose incorporation belongs to a later period of this reign, meets us in the present volume, in the entry of the payment of £40 as the annual fee of James Wishart, the King's Advocate, in the accounts of Fife rendered on 26th February 1522,[2] and again in those of the Comptroller rendered on 31st May 1522.[3] The earliest mention of this office is in the reign of James III., when Adam of Otterburn held it. There were for a considerable period prior to that date two branches of the legal profession—Notaries, and Prolocutors or Fore-speakers. But the Notaries received their commission from the Pope or Emperor, and were styled Apostolic or Imperial. Their protocol books, of which interesting examples have been preserved, show that they discharged the miscellaneous duties of agents and conveyancers. The Prolocutors, who attended the Courts of the King or Barons, were apparently sometimes relations or friends of the party, like Patrick Lyndsay of Pyetstoun, whose exploit in casting an indictment against his chief, Lord Lyndsay of the Byres, in the commencement of the reign of James IV., is so humorously described by Pitscottie; but at other times paid advocates, who are designed "Fore-speakers for the Cost." The first advocates who appear under the name were the Advocates of the Poor[1] in the reign of James I., but shortly after, in the same reign, the name is used as equivalent to Prolocutor and Fore-speaker.[2] The introduction of the office of King's, or as he was afterwards styled, Lord Advocate, after the model of the French Procureur du Roi, was in part due to the growing importance of the feudal and fiscal rights of the Crown. Ten years after the close of the present accounts the profession of Advocate really commenced by the admission of persons so called to practise before the Court of Session, under the Act which instituted that Court.[3] As James IV. may be said to be the founder of the medical profession in Scotland, so James V. may be deemed the creator of the legal profession, as a corporation with ascertained rights and duties. The King's Advocate does not yet take rank as one of the Officers of State: he is merely one of the King's servants. He does not appear to have attended any of the Exchequer Audits, and is paid less than the King's Tutor.

The wars and embassies of this agitated period gave a large scope and much importance to the office of Herald, and the Rolls and other records afford some interesting information with reference to the Lyon King of James IV. and V. William Cumyng of Inveralochy, second son of William Cumyng of Culter, in Aberdeenshire, had served as Marchmont Herald at least from 1499,[1] probably from a much earlier date, for in a charter by James IV., on 18th January 1504, of the lands of Inveralochy to him and his wife Margaret Hay, mention is made of his services to that King, and his father and mother, during thirty years.[2]

On 18th September 1507 a charter was granted by the King in favour of William Cumyng the elder of both Inveralochy and Easter Collessie in Fife, which were transferred on 14th July 1513, under reservation of the liferent of his father and mother, to William Cumyng the younger.[3] The Marchmont Herald had been knighted in 1507, and before

31st January 1514[1] he became Lyon King in succession to Henry Thomson. In this capacity he carried the challenge and declaration of war by James IV. to Henry VIII., then engaged in the siege of Terouanne, when he refused to take a verbal answer from the English king, and received a written one in "very sour" and proud words. He returned by Flanders, but not finding a ship in time, did not arrive till the field was stricken, and our King was slain.[2]

Another instance of his boldness has been already noticed when he charged Angus to appear before the Council in 1515 to answer for his marriage to Margaret Tudor, and admonished Lord Drummond for his resistance to the order, when that irascible noble struck him with his fist, for which he was forfeited by Albany's Parliament. Throughout these accounts there are various references to his fee of 20 merks as Lyon, which was paid out of the farms of Collessie down to 1518;[3] and in the account of Fife rendered on 26th February 1522 we learn that he was dead, for payment of his salary is said to be that due to the late Lyon Herald, King of Arms.[4] No mention is made of his successor in the present accounts, but the next Volume will probably disclose whether Sir David Lyndsay was at once appointed, or not till 1530 as is usually stated.[1] Another reference to Cumying in this volume shows that he had been sent to France to Albany before 1515, and had been shipwrecked on the Danish coast. In recompense for his losses, and for his expenses, he received £72 from the Customs of Edinburgh,[2] and £83 from the rents of Fife.[3] The terms of the former of these entries implies that he had made at least one other voyage to France. The heralds of all countries at this period were constantly employed on diplomatic missions, and as the chief executive officers of the law, as well as in the more ornamental functions of royal processions and tournaments. The French herald Montjoie, the Danish Norway herald, and the English Clarencieux herald frequently meet us in the State correspondence. It would be an interesting inquiry why the College of Heralds did not become the diplomatic profession of the future. Perhaps the answer would be that they were too closely associated with the feudal system; that the Ecclesiastics were deemed, and probably proved themselves better adapted for the task of negotiation; and that a class of laymen who were not heralds began soon after this period to cultivate the diplomatic art after methods which heralds, the practitioners of the heroic science, would have disdained to use.

Two of the women who figure prominently in these Accounts, Mariot Boncle and Margaret Crichton, deserve a brief notice as examples of the position of their sex in Scotland in the sixteenth century.

Mariot Boncle, whose name occurs in previous accounts, was the widow of John Lindsay of Wauchopdale, in Dumfriesshire, a considerable landowner in the reign of James IV. He had received the lands of Reidspittal, part of Balincrief,[1] in respect of his surrender of Wauchopdale on 31st April 1507, having forfeited that estate for treason under a decree of the Parliament of 1506.[2] He had also acquired Barcloy, Claysick, and other lands in Galloway,[3] which seems to have been his principal estate. He died in 1508, and Mariot Boncle, his spouse, paid the entry for these lands after the Exchequer audit held in that year.[4]

In the present volume there is printed a Royal Letter or Grant by James IV. on 24th February 1513, by which, in consideration of "the gude and thankfull service done to us and oure derest fallow the quene be oure lovit oratrice and wedow Mariot Bonkle, the relict of umquhile Johnne Lindesay," the King grants to her for all the days of her life the lands of Auchinhay, Clonyearg, Auchinskeauch, Glenstokane, and Auchinlosk, in the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright, and the Auditors of Exchequer are charged to "defeis"[1] the Chamberlain of Galloway of the rents and profits of these lands. This accordingly was done in the audits throughout the present Accounts, in which the multure due by the town of Auchinhay was also remitted to her.[2] Mariot Boncle had also tacks of other lands in Galloway, in the parish of Colvend.[3]

These entries should have some interest for the diligent local students of the Stewartry, who have not been able hitherto to trace these lands at so early a date.[4] From the entry already noticed in another place of the delivery to Mariot Boncle by Margaret Crichton of the velvet bought for the young King's tunics in 1515,[5] it appears probable that she held some office in the Royal Household, possibly that of Keeper of the Wardrobe.

Long after, the Parliament of James VI. in 1593, at the instance of James Lindsay of Barcloy, the great-grandson of John Lindsay and Mariot Boncle reduced the sentence of forfeiture which had been pronounced against his great-grandfather, upon the ground that he had not been lawfully summoned to the Parliament of James IV. in 1506, at which his estate of Wauchopdale had been forfeited.[6]

It is not certainly known to what family Mariot Boncle belonged, but she may not improbably have been a daughter or relative of Alexander Boncle, a Scottish merchant, whose house at Middleburgh is mentioned in Halyburton's Ledger, and a relative of Edward Boncle, the Provost of Trinity College Church in the reign of James III. Whatever her family, she was evidently active in business affairs. The slaughter at Flodden brought forward many women into prominent positions and offices which their deceased husbands had held; but this, after all, was only a conspicuous example of what frequently occurred during the Middle Ages. Such lives as those of Margaret Tudor and Margaret Drummond and her sister show how birth and beauty asserted their influence. It has been less frequently noticed that there were also women of business, who were actively engaged in the acquisition and management of land and the conduct of commerce in 16th-century Scotland.

There is another woman frequently referred to in this Volume, whose birth and curious history give her a greater interest than Mariot Boncle.

Margaret Crichton first appears in the present Accounts as the widow of George Halkerston,[1] Burgess and Custumar of Edinburgh, who fell at Flodden, and she continued to hold this office and to render accounts as Custumar of Edinburgh down to 21st October 1516.[2]

[1] She had been married before to another burgess, William Todrick. The names both of Todrick and Halkerston have been preserved in well-known wynds and closes of the Old Town of Edinburgh.

[2] Pages 52, 102, 199, and 267.

The last of these accounts was audited on 21st August 1517, and in it she still retains the name of Margaret Crichton. We know, however, from a Charter in the Great Seal Register, dated 1st April 1517,[1] that before that date she had contracted an irregular marriage with George, Earl of Rothes. This charter singularly enough recites the fact that the marriage had been contracted per verba de futuro cum carnali copulâ inde secutâ. It conveys the lands of Hilltaces and various other lands in Fife, which had been adjudged for a debt of £1065, 6s. 8d. to Andrew Barton in liferent, and his son Alexander in fee, but had been redeemed by the payment of that sum, with 200 merks in addition, by Margaret Crichton to Robert Barton as curator of his nephew Alexander. The lands are settled on the Earl and Margaret, and the longest liver, in conjunct infeftment, and the male heirs lawfully procreated between them, provided their marriage was solemnised and held legitimate, or, if necessary, legitimated by a dispensation, whom failing, on the heirs of Margaret Crichton until her debt was repaid, with a clause of return to the Earl after repayment. The early history of this lady, from 1496 onwards, has been traced by Mr Dickson in an Appendix to the Preface to the Treasurer's Accounts.[2] She was the illegitimate daughter of Lord Crichton, born probably before 1483, and Lady Margaret, second daughter of James II. She had married, probably in 1506, William Todrick, a merchant in Edinburgh, and an exemption from customs, probably the foundation of her future fortunes, had been granted to her and her spouse by James IV. in 1506.[2] This exemption was continued to her and her second husband, Halkerston, in 1510,[3] though limited to 100 merks a year.

In the present Volume of the Rolls we have seen that she entertained Albany to supper prior to 15th September 1516, and an allowance was made in her account as Custumar for the claret provided on that occasion.[4]

The next reference to her is in the account of the Customs of Edinburgh which she rendered on 21st August 1517,[5] still under the name of Margaret Crichton. But in the account at the same audit of Robert Barton the Comptroller, who had been associated with, and ultimately superseded her in the office of Custumar of Edinburgh, there is notice of a remission of custom due by her, in regard to which she is styled Margaret Crichton, Countess of Rothes, and she is again referred to as Countess[6] in Barton's account of 21st August 1518, in which it is stated that she renounced the immunity from customs to the extent of 100 merks, which she had received under the letter of James IV. in favour of her and her former husband, Halkerston.[1] In a later audit, however, on 31st May 1522,[2] this sum of 100 merks was again allowed to her by the auditors. From these references it is impossible not to surmise that the supper at which she entertained Albany may have had something to do with her marriage to the young Earl of Rothes, and that his marriage to this well-tochered widow of two merchant burgesses was perhaps an affair, on his side, of money as much as of love.

The later history of this lady was very singular, and gave rise to scandal at the time, and curiosity afterwards. She was the mother of Norman Lesley,[3] sometimes called Master of Rothes, who became so famous as a chief actor in the murder of Cardinal Beaton; but on the death of George, Earl of Rothes, at Dieppe, on 9th November 1558, that noble was succeeded by another son, Andrew Lesley, who was the child of Agnes Somerville, designated as his wife in a series of charters between 29th January 1530 and 22nd February 1541.[4] In the Charters of 1539 and 1540 both ladies appear.

[2] Page 466.

[3] Charter, 21st Oct. 1542, Nos. 2809 and 2810. In these charters Margaret Crichton is styled only mother of Norman Lesley, and not Countess of Rothes. According to a pedigree once in the possession of Camden, and afterwards of Sir R. Cotton, there were the following sons of this marriage:—(1) George, who died young; (2) Norman; (3) William; (4) John, who died young; (5) Robert. Riddel, Remarks on Scottish Peerage Law, p. 191.

[4] Series of Charters in Great Seal Register, 29th Jan. 1530, 25th Aug. 1532, 21st July 1536, and 8th to 10th July 1539, 15th Feb. and 13th Dec. 1540, and 22nd Feb. 1541.

In that of 10th July 1539, for example, Agnes Somerville, who is described as the Earl's spouse, is granted a liferent in the lands of Drowmane, while Margaret Crichton, who is neither designed Countess of Rothes nor his spouse, is granted the liferent of the fourth part of the domain lands of Lesley, a portion of the Rothes estates she had acquired as a creditor. In a Charter, however, of 31st May 1542,[1] she again appears as Margaret Crichton, Countess of Rothes, having apparently survived her rival Agnes Somerville. Crawford, in his Peerage, conjectured that Rothes had separated from Margaret Crichton after their irregular marriage and had married Agnes Somerville, and Mr Riddell discovered evidence that they had been divorced by a decree of the Rector of Flisk on 27th December 1520,[2] and conjectures that she must have obtained a reduction of this divorce, so as to have re-acquired the title of Countess of Rothes, which she undoubtedly held in 1542. Margaret Crichton last appears in history in a passage of Buchanan's History of Scotland, where, after noticing the scandal relating to her illegitimate birth,—for her father, Lord Crichton, had a wife alive when she was born,—he states that she was "not long since deceased."[3] Allowing for a considerable latitude in this expression, Margaret Crichton's life, so interwoven with the special scandals of this age, the facility of divorce, and the frequency of illegitimacy, must have been a long one. Her career affords another example of a woman acquiring wealth, actively engaging in the transaction of business, and even holding an important public office.

Foreign Relations of Scotland.

This Volume, like the preceding one, contains notices of some of the Foreign Ambassadors or Envoys who took part in the constant negotiations of Scotland with other Powers, as well as of several French commanders or captains and some civilians who during Albany's Regency served in Scotland. The hostile relations between Scotland and England made it imperative for the smaller country to seek allies, and the Scottish Government naturally turned principally to two quarters, Denmark and France. Christiern II., who succeeded to the Danish Crown shortly before Flodden, though two degrees more distant than his father Hans from James IV., was still the near kinsman of James V. Scotland and Denmark were alike exposed to foes on their Borders, and sought mutual aid. Scottish merchants had settled in Copenhagen, Scottish mariners served the Danish King, and Scotland was frequently visited by Danes on their way to and from the Continent.

The remembrance of the old league between France and Scotland, though not yet strengthened as it was soon to be by matrimonial relations between the Royal Houses, had been kept alive by mutual good offices, and was at no period a more lively sentiment or a more practical reality than during the Regency of Albany. The privileges of natural-born subjects had been granted, towards the close of the reign of Louis XII., to all Scotsmen in France. By an ordinance of Francis I. their goods were to be admitted at Dieppe free of the custom levied on foreign merchandise. The French King had a bodyguard of Scottish Archers, and Scotchmen commanded French armies and acquired French estates. Scottish ecclesiastics held French benefices, and Scottish students completed their studies in Paris or Orleans, where some remained as Professors, as they do now in the English Universities. Scottish merchants traded with France in preference to England, from which they were often excluded, or where, if admitted, they ran the risk of their goods being seized when war broke out. In 1523 Henry VIII. took the extreme step of driving all Scots out of England, as Edward I. had driven the Jews.

Nor was the advantage of the alliance between France and Scotland all on one side. A Frenchman was Regent of Scotland. French captains were keepers of its strongest castles. Frenchmen were to be found in civil and a few in ecclesiastical offices. The French trade in wine, linen, and fruits was probably more lucrative than the Scottish trade in wool, skins, and salmon. The French language was so much used that it began to modify the Lowland Scottish Teutonic dialect.

Let us first notice the traces in these Accounts of the continuing, though declining, connection between Scotland and Denmark; and afterwards, those of the more important and increasing intimacy between Scotland and France. The first allusion to the relations with Denmark occurs in the account of the Chamberlain of Galloway from 20th July 1513 to 20th July 1514, in which that officer is allowed £10 for a payment to Magnus the Dane,[1] by order of the Queen, at the time when he lay ill of fever in Galloway. This refers to Magnus, the nephew of Ove Bilde, Chancellor of Denmark, who had been sent several years before to be educated in Scotland. On 17th January 1513, James IV. wrote letters commendatory of the young Dane both to the King and Queen of Denmark, in which he stated that he had given proof of his ability, fidelity, and discretion, so that he was worthy of being trusted with any business, however important and urgent.[1] The articles of his commission[2] have been preserved, and contain an urgent appeal for men and provisions, which would be paid for, to aid James against the threatened English invasion. The death of Hans of Denmark on 20th February 1513, and the commotions which followed in the Scandinavian Kingdom, would in any event have frustrated this appeal, but it appears probable from the date of Roll[3] in which the entry occurs that Magnus Bilde was prevented by fever from sailing to his native country, and remained in Galloway until some months after the death of that monarch.

His son and successor, Christiern II., was prevented by his own troubles with the Swedes and with Lubeck, the chief town in the north of the Hanseatic League, from rendering aid to Scotland. The accounts of the Custumars of Edinburgh between 20th July 1514 and 20th September 1515 show that the Norway Herald, perhaps Thomas Scott, a Scotchman in the Danish service, had visited Scotland, for 50 crowns or £45 was allowed for his expenses.[4] In the same accounts £10 was paid to Henry Scott, a mariner of Leith, who had gone to Denmark on public business, and was possibly the skipper of the ship which carried the Danish Herald and the Scottish Unicorn Pursuivant to that country. The object of the Scottish mission is explained by a letter of Albany of 23rd August 1516,[1] which states that the truce with England had been prolonged to St John's Day, the 24th of June 1517, and urgently requests an answer to the inquiry as to what troops the Danes would send to defend Scotland by June of that year.

From the Fife Accounts rendered on 9th August 1516, it appears that there were various missions of heralds and others to Denmark[2] about this time, and the payment of 100 scuta or crowns of gold to Sir Anthony Darces De La Bastie in 1514 may very likely refer to his embassy to Denmark. From the account of Robert Barton the Comptroller between 3rd September 1517 and 25th September 1518, it appears that the Norway Herald had again visited Scotland during that year, for a puncheon of wine and two sheep were given to him.[3]

In 1518 the tables were turned, and the Danish monarch was now in urgent need of aid from Scotland against the rebellious Swedes. The Norway Herald was sent by way of Scotland to France, with letters from Albany as well as Christiern II., in which it was proposed that a new league should be formed between Denmark and France, with Scotland included. The Regents, Chancellor, and Council of Scotland met on 10th June, considered the proposal, and entrusted the Norway

Herald with their answer.[1] It stated that they would authorise the new League as soon as it was formally brought before them. On 7th August 1518 a letter sent by John Elgin informed the Danish King that, notwithstanding the English incursions and the risings of the West Highlands, a force would have been sent to assist Christiern if news had not come that the Danes had gained a signal victory over the Swedes. On 19th January 1519 Alexander Kinghorn, a Scottish doctor in the Danish service,[2] came as Ambassador with a still more pressing demand for 2000 troops, ships, and supplies, to arrive at Copenhagen before Easter. The Regents replied on 27th March that they had sent letters throughout the kingdom that (following a doubtful practice of the Middle Ages) declaring that all persons guilty of treason who would go to Denmark as soldiers should receive a pardon: a fixed contingent could not be sent at the time asked, but an auxiliary force would be despatched.[3] Arran wrote to the same purport,[4] that his troops, and if need be he himself, would come. Accordingly, on 27th May, Captain James Stewart of Ardgowan was despatched with a force of foot soldiers and ships,[5] and others were to follow, though it was explained that, owing to the scarcity of the harvest, it would be very difficult to send provisions.[6]

Scarcely had the Scottish troops been despatched before news came of a Scottish merchant vessel having been seized by the Swedes at Stralsund; and though the Danish fleet had procured the release of the crew, the vessel with its cargo had been detained.[1] The Scottish Regents warmly expostulated with their ally, and demanded the restoration of the ship.[2]

The last letters to the Danish King at this period are from Beaton the Chancellor, requesting him to instruct his representatives at Rome to take part against the machinations of Gavin Douglas, who was still intriguing for ecclesiastical promotion, with the support of Henry VIII.; from the Archbishop of St Andrews, as to the Abbacy of Dunfermline; and a third from the Scottish King in April 1523, sent by Dr Kinghorn, now Dean of Roskild, who had once more come as Ambassador to Scotland, advising Christiern to take refuge from his rebellious subjects by flight, and yield to the exigency of the times. The Scottish relations with Denmark have been scantily treated by the historians of both countries, and we are glad to get information from the present Accounts[3] as to the force actually sent to assist Christiern. Robert Barton is allowed in his account of 1522, £1894, 16s. for the fitting out and provisioning of the ships, and Captain James Stewart received £80 on the precept of Albany. Walter Maluny, Abbot of [1] Epistolæ Regum, i. p. 463. [2] Ibid., i. p. 461. [3] Page 461.

Glenluce, a frequent agent of Albany, also went to Denmark, probably a little earlier, and received £250. Dr Kinghorn, the Danish Ambassador, was, according to the custom of the time, allowed £80 towards his expenses by the Chancellor and Lords of Council.[1] We learn from other writers as well as from the Accounts that the Abbot and Lord Fleming the Chamberlain went along with Kinghorn to France before his return to Denmark.[2] It was part of their mission to procure the return of Albany, and to concert measures along with him and the French King in favour of Christiern. That the scarcity of corn in Scotland was considerable may perhaps be inferred from three chalders of meal being the only provision for the soldiers which appears in the account.[3]

The tragic events which brought the reign of Christiern to a close—his coronation as King of Sweden, the blood-bath of Stockholm, in which 600 Swedish nobles perished, the escape of Gustavus Vasa the future founder of the new Swedish line, the attempts at reform, and the new rising against Christiern, headed by his uncle Frederick of Holstein, and his flight to the Netherlands—lie beyond the present period. But it is interesting to notice that the Scottish King and Kingdom did not fail their Danish kinsman and ally in his hour of need. This was probably not forgotten when the alliance was renewed, and a second Scottish King became husband of a Danish Princess.

[1] Page 411. A further payment of £8 was made to Kinghorn and Lord Fleming. As both payments appear in Robert Barton the Comptroller's last account in the present Volume, which covers the period from 27th August 1518 to 31st May 1522, the exact date of these payments cannot be fixed, but probably it was in 1519–20.

The earliest notices connected with France in this Volume relate to the unlucky navy of Scotland, the rival, in the size of one at least of its vessels, of the English or French navy. Its fate, after Arran led it to France, has been somewhat of a mystery, which we are now able partly to dispel. A payment of £46 is entered in the Bute Accounts of 1514 as made to Arran for his expenses[1] at the time when he lay before Bute in the ships with which he went to the French King. This must refer to the time when, after the useless sack of Carrickfergus, Arran returned to the Scottish West Coast and lay idle at the critical moment of the campaign. But it deserves notice that an incidental entry[2] in these Accounts implies that the voyage to France was made by command of James IV. Another entry in the same year is for payment of the pots and pans (ollæ et patellæ) provided for the fleet and of ten chalders for victualling the ships.[3] The great "St Michael," in which Arran himself sailed, was sold by Albany to Louis XII. on 2nd April 1514, at the Chatelet of Paris, for 40,000 francs of Tours, to be paid in four annual instalments,[4]

[1] Page 21.
[2] Page 173.
[3] Page 87.
[4] Epistolæ Regum Scotorum, i. 214.

and the sale was afterwards ratified by the Parliament of Scotland. Two smaller ships, the "James" and "Margaret," named after James IV. and his Queen, are shown by the present Accounts to have returned to Scotland, for James Stewart, a brother of the Laird of Ardgowan, received, by order of Albany, a payment out of the balance of the rents of Ross for provisioning them when they lay at Dumbarton between 12th August 1515 and 19th August 1516, and various other entries for victualling the King's ships at Dumbarton and Dunbar prove that a remnant of the Royal navy continued to be maintained during this period.[1] The chief naval harbours and arsenals on the west and east coasts were at these places, and at Leith, where the new work commenced by James IV. was still continued. They were protected by French garrisons under French commanders, or by Scotsmen in the interest of Albany.[2] One of these entries[3] implies that some of the ships belonged to Albany, and had been probably brought over by him from France. One vessel, "The Gabriel," commanded by Dougal Campbell, was employed to aid the Earl of Argyle and John M'Can or M'Ian of Ardnamurchan in 1514–15 in their expedition against the rebels of the Isles, who were attempting to establish the title of Sir Donald of Lochaber as Lord of the Isles.[4]

[3] Gregory, Western Highlands, p. 114.
[4] Page 55.

This ship carried supplies and artillerymen to Dunevaig in Isla and other castles of MacIan.[1] The "Black Bark" of Abbeville, which may have been one of Albany's French vessels, was also stationed on the West Coast, and made apparently several voyages along with other smaller craft from Ayr to Lamlash in Arran, and was employed along with "The Gabriel" in carrying artillery and provisions.[2] It was taken by the Spaniards before 1522.[3] The perils of the yet unlighted sea are shown by several references to shipwrecks. The wreckers of the coast, and the reprisals of Flemish, Spanish, Portuguese, and English privateers, so frequently mentioned in the Royal letters of this period, probably account for the destruction of the remains of the navy. There are no notices of any new ships being built. The race of the gallant captains of the Forth, Sir Andrew Wood and the Bartons, appears to have become extinct. The English raids across the Border were henceforth usually preceded or accompanied by a naval force, which met with feeble resistance as it sailed along the coast or up the estuary of the Forth, destroying the Scottish shipping and harassing the seaboard towns.

The next allusions to France in the Accounts relate to the comprehension of Scotland in the peace which Francis I. made with Henry VIII. It had included clauses allowing the Scotch, as allies of the French, to come under the treaty, but if the Border raids continued they were to be deprived of its protection. The account of Margaret Crichton as Custumar of Edinburgh rendered on 20th September 1515 contains a payment of £90 to "Willebrand, Ambassador of the most Christian King, bearing the comprehension of peace between us and the English, paid on a precept of the Lords of the Council." This would scarcely reveal the name of Macè or Matthieu de Villebresme were we not accustomed to the havoc played by Scottish writers with French as by French with Scottish names. Villebresme, a chamberlain of Francis I., had been sent by him on 9th April 1515 with letters stating the terms of the peace between France and England, and exhorting the Scots to join it. His exhortations were supported by Balthasar Stewart, an envoy of Leo X., who had been a year in Scotland using all his efforts to persuade the Scots to abstain from war with England, and join in the Crusade against the Turks. De La Bastie had already been sent to Scotland in the previous year, 1514, partly to represent Albany, but also to urge peace on the Scots, who continued for some time to show unwillingness to make terms with England. The Scottish Council, to whom letters from Francis I. were delivered on 3rd May 1516, replied, with a touch of braggadocio, that the Kingdom was still eager to revenge Flodden, and would never have thought even of a truce;

yet, that they yielded to the wishes of their old and faithful ally,[1] and their Venerable Father the Pope. About the same time Francis I. had sent another ambassador, John de Planis, who arrived in Edinburgh before 12th February 1516,[2] to explain the motives which had led him to renew the peace with England, his desire that the Scots should be included, and his resolution to stand by the Scottish King if Henry would not continue the peace, and to express the hope that the Scottish would in that event assist him, as they had done in previous times. De Planis is not mentioned at this time in the Accounts, but six years later[3] he again came with Robert Stewart, Lord D'Aubigny, and their expenses were paid for from Dunbar to Leith.[4] This D'Aubigny, who became a Marshal of France, was the second son of John, Lord Darnley, Earl of Lennox, and had married the daughter of the old Marshal D'Aubigny, who died in Scotland in 1508.[5] Another Frenchman was employed as a frequent intermediary between Albany and the Lords of the Council, who were urging his return. Under the disguise of Monsieur La Fyot, who received a gift of five puncheons of claret,[6] and carried six barrels of salmon to Albany,[7] we may detect

La Fayette, who, according to Bishop Lesley, came along "with a French clerk, Cordell, and ane Inglis herald callit Clarencieux, with ane ambassador also fra the Governour, with ane treaty of peace for ane year's truce between Scotland and England."[1] Neither of these embassies are recorded in the French State Papers collected by Teulet, so it is of some importance to obtain, as we do, record evidence in these Accounts to support the statements of Lesley. French embassies were so frequent indeed during this period, owing to the shifting policy of Francis I., that we cannot obtain full information as to them from any single source. Teulet supplies information as to the mission on 13th August 1522 of Monsieur de Charron,[2] whose name does not appear in the present Accounts, while another French Ambassador, Pulzart, who received a payment of £100 in 1521-2,[3] has not been identified with any of the envoys whose names occur in the French archives. A curious entry[4] "pro expensis lie Gilyam de post," coming from the Governor to the Kingdom, probably points to a special service of post, and a Royal messenger called William, employed in communications between Albany and Scotland.

There were, of course, frequent embassies from Scotland to France, for the French party was always pressing for the return of Albany, while the Government was by no means satisfied with the conduct of Francis I., and specially expostulated with him on his retention of the Comté de Santoigne, which had been granted to James I. for his services in the French wars. In connection with such missions we notice Sir James Hamilton, who was sent to France with George Douglas, the brother of Angus, in 1517;[1] Captain Bukkat,[2] a French officer of artillery, and the Earl of Arran, who went in 1521[3] along with, or a little before, Walter Maluny, Abbot of Glenluce, and the Albany Herald,[4] who were despatched to overcome the reluctance of Albany to return to Scotland. They were followed, as we have seen, by Lord Fleming, the Chamberlain of Scotland, and Dr Kinghorn, the Danish envoy.[5] These envoys went, doubtless, with the same purpose, and perhaps carried a higher bid for the services of Albany, who appears always to have kept pecuniary considerations in view.

By far the most important link in the connection between France and Scotland, after Albany himself, was Sir Anthony D'Arces De La Bastie. The present writer has taken the opportunity of telling in another place[6] the romantic story of this gallant knight-errant, who became so well known in Scotland for his prowess in the Lists in the days of James IV., his energetic conduct as Albany's representative, and his tragic death. It is too long for an incidental notice in a Preface, and what is said here must be confined to the references to De La Bastie in the Accounts.

He received a payment of 100 gold scuta, equal to £90 Scots, by order of Albany in 1515–16;[1] and in the same year russet, white, and coarse cloth, a pair of jack-boots, and the necessary furnishings of pots, pans, brazen and other domestic vessels, as well as three lasts of salmon for the Castle of Dunbar were provided at a cost of £195, 13s.,[2] besides £108, 10s. for the wages of himself and his servant, of which he received £88, 10s. for himself. The only other allusion occurs after his murder, and in the Accounts of 1518, the sum of £184, 9s. 4d. was allowed to his widow, a Norman lady of the name of Ferrier, for her expenses and those of Captain St Jakkis from the date of La Bastie's "treacherous slaughter" to the coming of Captain Maurice De Nogent. He was slain by the Humes on the marshy field called Batties Bog near Dunbar.

Many other French or foreign minor personages who came in Albany's train, or as a result of his Regency, flit across the Accounts, which, like the Treasurer's books and other records of this period, show how considerable a number of that nation found employment in the service of Scotland.

Such were the Captains of the Castles which Albany retained in his hands. Captain Jakkis, Maurice De Nogent at Dunbar,[1] the Portuguese Baron Sebastian Feres,[2] who acted as De La Bastie's Lieutenant in the same fortress; the Captain of Milan, Alan Stewart,[3] who held Dumbarton; Captain Groselles, and Captain Janet,[4] who both acted as Albany's masters of the household; Crochet, who served in the same office,[5] one of whose duties was to oversee the repairs of Falkland Castle,[6] and who was an Auditor of the Exchequer Accounts during the Regency; Captain Bukkat or Bousquet, styled in the Treasurer's Accounts a Commissioner of Artillery,[7] who made more than one voyage to France, the last in 1517 or 1518;[8] Rokat, a French merchant, who exported woollen cloth, hides, and coals free of custom;[9] Saturnino the Duke's banker, probably an Italian money-lender,[10] and Jacques Merchel his Secretary,[11] besides many other men and French sailors and artillerymen, and a troop of Italian musicians or actors.[12]

One other somewhat mysterious character, probably not a foreigner, though he is styled Dux Mediolanensis, or Duke of Milan, is the subject of more than one entry. His real name was John Hill, and he received £5 from the King's bounty in 1518,[1] and in 1522 the same sum from the King's bounty,[2] £20 from the Regents,[3] and £8, 13s. 4d. out of the feus of Aberdeen, by letters under the hand of Albany.[4] The last reference to him which has been found is in the Treasurer's account on 16th October 1529, when he received forty shillings by the King's command. Pinkerton[5] and Pitcairn[6] conjectured that he was Captain Groselles, one of Albany's foreign captains, but this appears to have been due to a confusion between the Duke of Milan and the Captain of Milan, and the further mistake of identifying the Captain of Milan with Captain Groselles, whom we have seen from the present Accounts to have been different persons, the former being Alan Stewart, who had acquired the title of Captain of Milan from his service in the Italian campaign, and who acted as Keeper of Dumbarton Castle. Possibly the Duke of Milan may have been only a soubriquet given to one of the old soldiers of the Milan campaign, or to one of the jesters who contributed to the amusements of the Court, and who derived his nickname from some real or pretended likeness to Maximilian Sforza, Duke of Milan.

It is somewhat singular that there is not a single reference to the Pope or his envoys, as we know that Albany was on intimate terms with Leo x., and that a Papal ambassador resided for a year in Scotland during this period. Nor are there any references to the Emperor Maximilian, or to any of the other foreign Courts with which Scotland had a good deal of intercourse. The absence of such references emphasises the fact that Denmark and France, especially France, were the countries with which Scotland was most intimate.

The Royal Palaces and the Castles of the King and the Barons.

A good deal of repair but not much new building went on during this period in connection with the Royal Palaces and Castles. James v. was to become,[1] like his grandfather, a lover of architecture, and one of his favourite counsellors, Sir James Hamilton of Finnart, is a prominent figure in the Accounts, though not yet as an Architect or Master of Works. This office consisted in superintending the workmen and defraying the cost of the Royal buildings, rather than in designing these. His letter of appointment as Master of Works for the Kingdom on 9th September 1539 has been preserved.[1] But before this, in 1535, he was Master of Works at Linlithgow.

[1] An interesting paper on the early history of Scottish architects, who were generally styled Master Masons, has been compiled by Messrs M'Gibbon & Ross, from which it appears that the building carried on so energetically by James iv. did not recommence on any extensive scale till 1530–1540. M'Gibbon & Ross, Domestic and Castellated Architecture of Scotland, p. 535.

The Royal minority and the disturbances of the time were not favourable to architecture, and most of the building at this period was for purposes of utility or of defence, and not of ornament. Stirling Castle was maintained as the residence of the King while he remained in his mother's custody, but after his surrender to Albany in 1515 it disappears from the Accounts. The interior of the fabric was repaired at the small cost of £28, 7s. 10d., paid on the Queen's mandate,[2] and besides this there were the wages of two carpenters of the King at £10 each, and a smith at £5.[3] Thomas Peebles, the glazier, continued to be paid £5 yearly for repairing the windows of each of the four Royal palaces.[4] The heirs of George Campbell, the principal gardener of the great garden under the Castle, the scene of so many of the festivities of James IV., received £2, and it is mentioned that Campbell himself had died under the royal standard in Northumberland,[5] a proof of how stringent the muster had been for that fatal campaign. The expenses of guarding the castle were more considerable. A payment of £80 was made in 1514 on the precept of the Queen to the Chaplain, who apparently discharged for a year the duties of Constable. Lord Drummond as Constable[1] in 1512 received £80 and in 1517 upwards of £200.[2] The dread of an attack by surprise is shown by the wages paid to eight watchmen by night as well as one watchmen and two porters by day, who each got a chalder of oatmeal and twenty shillings.[3] There was also another porter, John Craigingelt, who received for himself and his servant two chalders of barley instead of the meal formerly allowed,[4] and a trumpeter "serving daily," as is specially noted, probably to give the alarm if necessary. The eleven watchmen of Stirling, who also got an allowance of meal, appear to be the same persons as those above mentioned,[5] including the porters. It is noticeable in the cases of Stirling and of Falkland how small a garrison was needed for the purpose of guarding a mediæval castle, although there were doubtless also men-at-arms who served at their own charges or who were otherwise paid. The Great Garden and the Old as well as the New Park for Deer at Stirling[6] continued to be kept up, and an allowance was made of £3, 6s. 8d. for the lands of Gallowhills, which had been included in the Park.[7] The religious establishment was maintained—both the Old Church in the Castle,[8] a necessary part of every castle, and the Chapel Royal or Collegiate Church of James IV., for which the lands of Auchinvaid and Glensche in Kinclevin had been mortified.[1] These were additional to the parish church of the town and to the church of St Ninian, which also appear as charges in the Accounts.

The expenses of Linlithgow Palace, where the Queen and the young King do not appear to have lived for any length of time after his father's death, were naturally less. Stephen Balty, a mason, received a fee of £20 and his servant £6 for keeping the roof in repairs.[2] He died before 1516, and after his death the entry ceases. The garden and the herbage of the park had been reserved for the King's use,[3] and Sir Alexander M'Culloch[4] received £10 as Custodier of the Palace in the account for 1514. After that date no reference to the Palace occurs, Margaret Tudor being probably left to keep up her own dower-house as she best could.

The references to Falkland Palace are more frequent and interesting. We have already seen that it continued to be an occasional summer residence of the Queen-Mother, the King, and the Governor, and the entries showing it to have been garrisoned by James Beaton against a threatened attack by the Queen-Dowager have been noted. Besides the ordinary charges continued from the previous reign for the repairs of the aqueduct to the Palace and the upkeep of the glass, as well as for the Garden Park and Meadows of Falkland, some special entries showing the new work in progress occur in the present Accounts. £11, 13s. was allowed to the Chamberlain of Fife in 1516 in respect of repairs on the steps of the cellars of the new work, for repairing the tables and doors of the chambers, for making gates for the Park, and for several gates or doors of the Palace and its offices, besides stanchions for windows of the new work. All these expenses were contained in a schedule under the hand of Captain Janet, the Governor's Master of the Household.[1] A further sum of £34, 12s. 9d. was allowed for the wooden cases, iron and rafters for the windows of the new work, as well as for tiles and lime for the repair of the roof of the Palace and the Old Chapel, as certified by Thomas Hay, the Governor's Secretary, and Crochet, another of the Masters of his Household.[2] In the Account of 1514 there is an allowance for laying beams in the hall of the new Chapel,[3] and the Chaplain, Sir Thomas Balfour, receives his fee throughout the whole period of his Accounts, as well as a sum for vestments.[4] In the same Accounts rendered in 1522, £14 was allowed for a shed for the oxen fed for the Governor and the King, £2, 7s. for the keep of the oxen, £1 for the repair of the kitchen, £1, 10s. for the construction of a wall in front of the gate of the Palace, £13 to the tiler for the repair of all the houses connected with the Palace, and 14 shillings for the repairs and pointing with lime of the dovecot. Another entry which occurs throughout the Accounts is in respect of the loss of pasture for cattle caused by the wild animals fed by order of the King in the Ward of Falkland.[1] Besides the Park and Meadow grounds, there are references to the Orchard, which yielded a rent for the onions grown in it,[2] and to the Wood, of which Andrew Farnie was forester.[3] The ditches and palings received constant attention, and the garden was evidently more carefully looked after than those of Stirling or Linlithgow.

The Castle of Edinburgh was the most important fortress in the Kingdom. It dominated the town, as well as the newly-built Palace of Holyrood, which then consisted chiefly of a single tower, apparently not fortified. The Exchequer Rolls, as we saw in the last Volume, were kept there for safety between the Audits, and they continued to be so kept during the period embraced in the present. The Parliaments and Great Councils during Albany's Regency were held in the Tolbooth, and not, as has been supposed, in the Great Hall of the Castle; but probably the Rolls of Parliament were sent to the Castle for safe custody, although the Register House in it was not built till 1542. The young King during the same period, with brief intervals, resided in the Castle from June 1517 to the close of these Accounts. It was also the chief arsenal for arms, and there are frequent references to the Artillerymen, some of whom were named from their vocation, as George Gunnar and Jasper Smith, and cannons were stored in it under the charge of the Keepers, Sir Patrick Crichton and Robert Borthwick, and an Armourer, Alan Cochrane, who received a fee for cleaning the arms.[1]

Its defence was a necessary object of the ruling powers, and we have several entries on this subject. The wall near the Well Tower was repaired, and also those near the Postrom or postern gate.[2] At the same time a Brew-house and a Bake-house were erected, and the Portcullis of the front tower was furnished with iron chains and other necessaries.[3] These expenses, amounting in all to £132, 6s. 8d., were incurred on the joint mandate of the Queen, the Lord Governor, and the Lords of Council, so probably in the summer of 1515, and were supervised by Sir Patrick Crichton. The repair of the King's schoolroom in the Castle has been already noticed, and the chamber of Lady Gordon was also repaired. The Chaplain of the chapel, called the Chapel of the Barres, which stood under the south wall of the Castle, near the place now known as the King's Stables, continues to receive his annual fee.[4] Sir Patrick Crichton of Cranston

[3] Page 106.
[4] Pages 54, 102, 199. The Barris or Barras were the Lists of the Tournaments Field, and a Chaplain was a necessary official.

Riddle was Captain of the Castle[1] until near the close of this period. He died in 1521, and his eldest son James succeeded to his office;[2] an example of the inveterate tendency of offices in feudal Scotland to become hereditary. The fee of the Captain was four hundred merks a year; and as James Crichton received payment of 400 merks due on 1st June 1522,[3] the death of his father appears to have occurred on 1st June 1521. The Crichton family were much employed in the Royal service. Besides Sir Patrick and his son, there are references to Sir Peter Crichton of Naughton in the King's Wardrobe,[4] and of David Crichton in the Pantry.[5] There was also John Crichton of Innernyte, Chamberlain of Kinclevin,[6] and Margaret Crichton, widow of George Halkerstoun, afterwards Countess of Rothes, whose curious history has been already noticed, and to whose connection with the Royal family the offices of her kinsmen may perhaps have been due.

Holyrood is styled in the Accounts "the King's Palace in the monastery of Holyrood," but there is no evidence that the King lived there, as Albany did when he resided at Edinburgh. Its Custodier was not a soldier, as in the case of the fortified castles, but John Sharp the Chaplain, who received twenty merks as Keeper of the Chapel,

Palace, and Garden, as well as a payment for the keep of a lion.[1]

The North Tower, which was to become the tragic residence of Mary Stuart, had been built in the previous reign, and underwent some repairs at this time, as we learn from the entry of payments for a joist and Eastland boards to mend the window-sills and floors in 1516,[2] as well as for the glass of its windows, to prepare it for the reception of Albany.[3] This Tower still remains, having survived both Hertford's raids and the fire kindled by Cromwell's soldiers, though doubtless in part rebuilt, as may be seen at the portion of the wall adjoining the new building erected in the reign of Charles II. The gallery or hall was not built till 1672, and the space it occupies was at this time part of the garden between the tower and the chapel and other monastic buildings, as appears from the earliest drawing of Holyrood in 1544,[4] and the description by Alexander Hales about 1550.[5] The entry of a considerable quantity of coals for Albany's use at the Castle of Dunbar and the Palace of Holyrood indicate that these were his chief winter residences.[6]

Besides the principal Royal Castles, which were being gradually transformed into Palaces, there is some incidental information in the Accounts as to other Castles held for the King, or granted to the Crown vassals in various parts of the country. At Rothesay, a Royal castle of which Norman Stewart, the chamberlain of Bute, was keeper, a great tower called the Dungeon was built, at a cost of £191, 7s., by order of James IV.[1] The Hermitage in Liddesdale was held by Patrick Hepburn of Hailes, who was bound by his tenure to attend the Justice Ayre of Roxburgh.[2] Kincardine was in like manner held by William Graham, who had to attend the Courts of the Sheriff.[3]

The Castles of Artmurthy (Ardnamurchan) and Ḍunawage (Dunvaig in Isla), were provisioned and fortified in 1514–5.[4] Sasine was granted to David Boswell of the Castle of Auchenleck, in Ayrshire, in 1514.[5] The Castle of Blackadder in Berwickshire was in charge of Blackadder, Archdeacon of Glasgow,[6] who received £133, 6s. 8d. for its custody in 1517–8,—another example of an ecclesiastic discharging military functions. The Castle of Blackness on the Forth was maintained as a Royal fortress, and, like Inchgarvie, was used for the detention of State prisoners, under the charge of Sir Patrick Hamilton of Kinkavil,[7] and after his death, of his son James Hamilton.[8] The Castles of Bothwell and Braidwood in Lanarkshire were in the hands of

Archibald Douglas, to whom sasine of them and the adjacent lands was given in 1514.[1] Patrick, Lord Gray, had sasine of the Castle of Bruchte (Broughty) in Forfarshire in 1516.[2] Cairnyburg Castle in Mull was in the possession of the Earl of Argyle.[3] Dunrobin Castle, in the Barony of Strathnaver in Sutherland, was held by the Earl of Crawford.[4] Dingwall and Redcastle in Ross were held for the King by the Chamberlain of the county.[5] The Castle of Dirleton in Haddington was held by the heirs of Lord Haliburton.[6] The Castle of Dumbarton was in the hands of the King,[7] and that of Dunnook was held by John M'Ian of Ardnamurchan, who supported the royal interest.[8]

Dunbar was garrisoned by the French troops under De La Bastie; Fyvie was in the hands of William Meldrum of Formartyn, who received sasine of it in 1522.[9] Hume and Wedderburn Castles, after their forfeiture by the Humes, were held for the Crown by Sir James Hamilton of Finnart.[10] Kilbride in Argyle was held by Lauchlan Maclachlan, to whom sasine was given in 1522;[11] Leslie in Fife was inherited by George Leslie from his uncle in 1514.[12] Lochmaben, the old castle of the Bruces, was in the custody of Lord Maxwell, who kept in it various hostages for the security of the Kingdom.[13]

Renfrew was apparently a Royal Castle, and John Stewart held the lands on condition of providing at it an archer for service out of the kingdom. William Sinclair had sasine of Roslin Castle.[2] The Castle of St Andrews was placed under the charge of Captain Groselles, as representative of the Governor,[3] in 1522. Archibald Douglas had sasine of Tantallon in 1513,[4] but it afterwards fell into the hands of Albany, although this is not noticed in the present Volume.

Numerous as are these entries referring to Castles, they constitute only a small number of the total list of fortified Houses of all sizes in which the feudal nobles lived and ruled the surrounding country, while they controlled the adjacent burghs, and which still for nearly two centuries continued to be built, altered, and added to in every part of Scotland. The History of Scotland, as exhibited in these Accounts, and in the Buildings to which they refer, has now reached the turning-point between Mediæval Feudalism and the times we call Modern. We have already traced the origin of the modern Professions, of Law, Medicine, and Diplomacy, which were landmarks of this transition. The two great inventions which reached Scotland in this age—artillery and the printing-press, the machine of war and the machine of peace—were destined to become even more powerful causes of the overthrow of Feudalism. The strongest Castles were unable to resist the former, and the political domination of the Barons was more slowly but as surely destined to succumb under the growing influence of the latter.

In the Appendices will be found an attempt to show, so far as it appears in these Accounts, the Death-Roll of Flodden, whose dark and long shadow falls on so many pages of this Volume, and to collect the principal prices and salaries recorded in the present Volume. They afford evidence of the gradual recovery of the Kingdom from the effects of that fatal battle, and may perhaps serve as a contribution towards the History of Prices in Scotland, which it may be hoped will some day be written. But I have not attempted the difficult task of converting these prices into equivalent modern values.

In concluding this Preface, and quitting the editorship of these Rolls, an office undertaken as a duty of friendship to the late Editor, Mr George Burnett, amidst other vocations, which have only allowed me imperfectly to discharge it, I have to acknowledge the counsel, in all difficulties, which I have received in this, as in the preceding Volume, from Mr Dickson, the Historical Curator, and the kindness of Mr Archibald Anderson, Advocate, who not only prepared the Index, but also read the proofs of the Preface, to which he has made many valuable contributions.

I am confident that Mr J. P. M'Neil, Advocate, to whom the continuation of the series, now approaching the most interesting period of Scottish History, has been entrusted by the Deputy Clerk Register, will carry on the work in a manner worthy of the example set by Dr John Stewart and Mr Burnett.

THE DEATH-ROLL OF THE FLODDEN CAMPAIGN SO FAR AS IT APPEARS IN THE ROLLS.

The usual form of entry is "qui obiit in bello," "in campo bellico," or "in campo"; but the forms also occur, "qui obiit sub vexillo regis," which probably denotes with certainty that the death was at Flodden, or "qui obiit in exercitu in Northumberland," which perhaps indicates that the death occurred elsewhere than at Flodden, or that the place of death was unknown. In the Responde Books the earlier Sasines are silent as to the campaign. The later Sasines refer to it as "bellum," or "campus bellicus," and it is not till 1518 that Flodden is named, and then only about half-a-dozen times. It has not been thought worth while to indicate these different forms of expression in the following list further than to state those who are expressly said to have died under the King's banner, or where there is any other speciality in the entry. It must be borne in mind that it is only the King's vassals or tenants who left heirs in lands in the comparatively small portion of Scotland then held by the King, whose names can be expected to appear in the present Accounts. Besides the names in the following list, there are many other instances of Sasines taken in favour of the heirs of persons whom we know from other sources to have died at Flodden.

No. III.

PORTRAIT GROUP OF MARGARET TUDOR, THE REGENT ALBANY, AND A THIRD FIGURE; IN THE POSSESSION OF THE MARQUIS OF BUTE, AT CARDIFF CASTLE, GLAMORGANSHIRE.

For the following minute description of this picture I am indebted to notes by Mr J. M. Gray, Curator of the Scottish National Portrait Gallery at Edinburgh, which I have supplemented in a few points from another description by the well-known art critic, Dr Jean Paul Richter, with which I was favoured by Mr J. G. Godwin, Librarian of the Marquis of Bute, and from personal inspection of the picture during a visit to Cardiff in April 1893.

The size of the picture is $32\frac{1}{2} \times 45\frac{1}{2}$ inches. It is painted on oak panel (apparently in three longitudinal pieces, though, from the modern parquetting which protects the back, this is uncertain). It represents three standing figures, a little under life-size—Albany, Margaret Tudor, and a third person, unknown, behind Margaret, to right. The background is brown, but a green curtain, with yellowish lights in it, covers most of the background behind the heads of the two main figures—a man and woman, who face the spectator. The man (Albany) has ruddy brown hair, beard, and eyebrows, no moustache, dark grey-blue eyes. His upper coat, bordered with brown fur, has wide dark-green sleeves to the elbows, enriched with yellow slashings. Sleeves appear below this to wrists, which are pink in lights, crimson in the shadows; the same colours appear again at throat and breast. At his breast is a brooch, with what seems to be a shield of arms, probably on a stone. A ring, with diamond and ruby, is on the forefinger of his left hand. A purse with gold clasp, and bag of full-coloured cloth of gold, is held between the thumb and forefinger. With his right he receives what seems to be a white handkerchief, edged with gold embroidery, from the folds of which appears a pink-and-white or lilac-coloured carnation. What appears to be a red purse, with steel clasps, open, hangs at his waist, in front. Margaret Tudor has ruddy brown hair and eyebrows (a little lighter in tone than those of Albany). Her eyes are brown, very similar in colour to that of her hair, but a little darker. She wears a white head-dress, and piece of white cloth laid across shoulders and upper part of her arms, a black dress with standing collar, embroidered inside with white lace, which again appears at wrists. At her breast is a small posy of flowers, apparently a pink and some foliage, almost like that of a moss-rose. Round her neck there is a small black necklace. Below her waist, on each side, appears an upper petticoat of black silk, opening in front and disclosing a brown under-dress. From her waist hangs a rich girdle, with round gold clasp, set with a red stone, the girdle itself being of silver, enriched with gold. From the central circular clasp hangs a round pendant, with a decorative figure-subject, and inscribed "Manet-enim - angelus - domini - gladium - habens - et - secet - te - in - medium - Daniel 13 -" She has a small ring on the little finger of the right hand and two rings on the forefinger, third and little finger of the left hand, which holds a pair of grey leather gloves. The third figure has an embrowned face, ruddy moustache, hair, beard, and eyebrows; light grey eyes, scarlet uniform, edged with dark blue or black facings. The initial 'R,' in black, edged and decorated with gold lace, appears on the left side of his breast. The right side of his person is hidden by that of Margaret Tudor. The picture is a good deal retouched, very obviously in the red costume of the servant and in his left hand; but the faces of the main figures seem fairly preserved: the chin of the Queen is repainted.

The servant points to a red butterfly (Vanessa urtica, the small tortoise-shell butterfly) fluttering in the background. On a table before the two main figures are a brown book or portfolio loose in its binding, papers beneath it, a round object, possibly the handle of a white bone or ivory seal, and a pair of scissors, two inkstands conjoined with sand-boxes, in one of which are three quills. There are also several gold pieces scattered on the table near Margaret Tudor.

This picture nearly a century ago attracted the attention of Scottish antiquaries, but has not yet been fully explained. It was first engraved in 1799 by Mr Harding of Pall Mall, for Mr Pinkerton's Scottish Gallery, and has been reproduced by Mr Small in the preface to his edition of the Works of Gavin Douglas, and by Mr Grant in his "Old and New Edinburgh."

The lady of the picture is Margaret Tudor. Mr Gray notes that her face resembles that of the portrait at Newbattle, belonging to the Marquis of Lothian, though the brow is squarer and the face seems younger. The peculiar upper lip, turned up at the corners, may be noticed in both portraits.

Margaret Tudor, the elder daughter of Henry VII. and Elizabeth of York, married in 1503 James IV. when she was only 14 years of age. Within less than a year of his death at Flodden in 1513 she rushed into a second marriage with the young Earl of Angus, grandson of Angus "Bell-the-Cat," who, though already a widower, was a little younger than herself. Soon after the birth, in 1515, of their only child, Margaret Douglas, afterwards Countess of Lennox, she quarrelled with her husband, who had been unfaithful to her, and commenced proceedings for the divorce she eventually obtained from the Court of Rome in 1528. She was the grandmother both of Mary Stuart and of Darnley.

The principal male figure is beyond doubt neither James IV. nor Angus, as has been suggested, but John Stuart, Duke of Albany. A comparison of this portrait with one of Albany by the French painter Clouet, formerly in the Howard collection, of which a fac-simile has been published by Lord Ronald Gower, proves this, and the apparent ages, of the man about forty, and of the woman about thirty, correspond with the relative ages of Margaret Tudor and Albany, but not with those of Margaret and either of her husbands.

John, Duke of Albany, son of Alexander, Duke of Albany, brother of James III. by his wife Agnes De La Tour D'Auvergne, married in 1505 his first cousin, Ann De La Tour D'Auvergne, whose younger sister Magdalen became in 1518 wife of Lorenzo De Medici the younger, nephew of Leo X., and died in giving birth to Catherine De Medici. Anne, the wife of Albany, died in June 1524, without issue, leaving her great estates to her niece Catherine De Medici.

The royal blood of the Tudors and the Stuarts, represented by Margaret and Albany, and the parts they played in Scottish history, give this picture, in which they are brought together, an historical and romantic interest. Albany, though he served in several campaigns, was more of a civilian and diplomatist than a soldier or general, though, unlike a good diplomatist, he was hot-tempered. He used, Dacre the English Warden of the Marches reported, when angry to throw his hats, one of which is represented in this picture, into the fire. More than ten perished at one of their interviews. Imprudent in speech, he lost the support of Hume the Chamberlain of Scotland, when they first met, by a disparaging remark on his short stature, and he incensed Dacre by asking publicly, "What man is this Lord Dacre? Is there none of you that is Borderers that can at such meetings fall into altercation with him and do me a pleasure?"[1] He was lavish, fond of hawking and hunting, of games, cards and dice. He could show energy, as his first residence in Scotland proved, but he had no staying power. Tempted by the Regency and possible succession to the Scottish Crown, he made three visits to Scotland, each shorter than that preceding. But his heart was in France. He spoke French, signed his name in French, and called Francis I. his master. Skelton the English poet called him a coward, and Wolsey called him a fool, but both were prejudiced. More impartial judges saw in him a singular combination of vacillation and determination, qualities apparently antagonistic, but due to the conflict between his French and his Scottish interests. When the conflict was closed by James V. attaining manhood and marrying a French Princess, Albany's conduct became consistent. His aim was to keep Scotland dependent on France and attached to the Pope. In this he succeeded so far as the Royal House of Stuart, of which he was a cadet, was concerned, but failed as regards the nation, which moved towards England, and took part in the Protestant revolt. But this lies beyond the present subject, and is only glanced at so far as necessary to estimate the character of Albany, which has been often misinterpreted.

Margaret was like her brother so far as a woman could be, and her circumstances allowed. She was amorous, fond of dress and jewels, addicted to intrigue, strong-willed, fickle and treacherous, not without ability and tenacity, as her voluminous correspondence shows, but in the end distrusted by every one because of her double dealing. It cannot be said that these portraits make any revelation of the character of either Margaret or Albany, which I have drawn from history. Their faces look away from each other towards the spectator, either as if they were concealing their feelings, or as people sitting for their portraits often appear, almost without character.

What is wanting in them is, however, made up for by some incidents of the picture I shall afterwards notice, and by the third figure—the man in the background behind Margaret, whose extended right hand points to a butterfly floating in the air between the two principal figures. His livery of scarlet and black or dark blue answers to the royal livery of England at that time. Both these colours were used for the tunic[1] which the Heralds wore underneath their long gown of sad or murrey colour, and before they donned the tabard in the discharge of official duty, presenting letters of greeting or defiance from their Royal master, or making proclamations in his name. His attitude is that of a spy or detective pointing out something which the principal figures do not disclose.

The artistic interest of the picture is considerable, though its age and partial restoration render it difficult to say how considerable that interest may have been. It has been classed by Dr Waagen as possibly by Holbein, one of the greatest masters of portraiture. Other critics have called it by the vague name of the School of Holbein. But the probable date of the picture is adverse to either attribution. It may be assumed that it must have been painted before 1524, when Albany finally left Scotland, for after this date he never met Margaret Tudor. Holbein did not come to England till 1526,[2] and there is no reason to suppose that he ever saw either Albany or Margaret Tudor, though more than one of her portraits or supposed portraits have been attributed to him. The two principal figures, though scarcely worthy of the brush of Holbein, are well painted, both in general aspect and in details, especially in the hands, a crucial test of the art of the portrait painter. They certainly leave the impression of good likenesses. The third figure is evidently also a portrait, though some judges have deemed it an afterthought, inserted by another and inferior artist, but personal inspection of the picture does not favour this criticism.

Without pretending to solve all the questions this picture suggests, the historical relations which existed between Margaret Tudor and Albany, and the view taken of them by Henry VIII. and Wolsey, along with a passage in the present volume of Exchequer Rolls, enable us at least to approach a solution of the most important points.

Towards the close of the year 1521 a rumour began to circulate in Europe that Margaret Tudor, who had returned to Scotland in 1517 from her brother's court, where she had been well received, and from which she returned loaded with the presents she most valued, dress and jewels, and Albany who had come back from France in the autumn of 1521, had not merely forgotten their old enmity, the cause of Margaret's flight to England, but had become close allies. Scandal added that they were too intimate for persons each of whom had a living spouse.

The first notice of this intimacy, and also of a possible marriage between Margaret and Albany if she succeeded in obtaining a divorce from Angus, appears in a letter of Wolsey[1] from Calais to Henry VIII. in the middle of November 1521. He had been four months in France, engaged in the conference which ended in an alliance between England and the Emperor, and a declaration of war with France. After mentioning that it was reported that Albany had come to Scotland, which he could not believe, as Francis I. had promised to detain him in France, he proceeds :—"Signifying unto your Grace that I have not oonely writen unto your Oratour in the Courte of Rome to impeche and lett the sute made in that Courte by the Queene of Scottis for a divorce betwixt her and her housbande the Erle of Anguishe;

but also have caused the Poope's Oratour [1] here being to write in moost effectuell maner to His Holinesse, for stopping of the same, by meane whereof the said divorce shall not procede, when the Poope shall be informed that the same is procured oonely for mariage to be made betwixt the Duke of Albany and the Queene there, whereby the destruccion of the young King shall ensue."[2]

On 18th December 1521 Dacre transmitted to Wolsey certain Articles [3] subscribed by Lords Angus, Hume, and Somervell at Kirk of Steele on the 14th, containing amongst other charges against Albany this (5)—"that on Albany's coming to Scotland he visited the Queen at Stirling, and went in her company to Linlithgow and so to Edinburgh. On the second day after their arrival the Duke received the keys of the castle, where the King was, from the Captain, and delivered them to the Queen, who gave them back to him." On which Dacre, in a separate paper transmitted at the same time, gives—"The opinion of me Lord Dacre, under the correction of the King's Highness and your Grace, to the Articles afore written (5). It is true that there is marvellous great intelligence between her and the Duke, as well all the day as much of the night; and in manner they set not by who know it. And if I durst say it, for fere of the displeasure of my Sovereign, they are over tender, whereof if your Grace enquire of the Bishop of Dunkeld of his conscience, I trust he will show you the truth." It did not require any appeal to the conscience of Gavin Douglas to stimulate him to corroborate any charge against Albany, whom he called the "Wicked Duke," or against Margaret, with whom he had quarrelled,

[1] This was Clerk, who had written to Wolsey on 10th October 1521, "The Queene of Scottis is suing for a divorce. Albany is her Factor." Ellis Historical Letters, 3rd ed., i. 262.

and who declared, Tudor-like, as she had made him Bishop of Dunkeld, she could unmake him.

On 20th December Dacre again reported to Wolsey, from whom he had apparently first heard [1] of the alleged design of Albany's marriage with Margaret Tudor, that—"aid must be given to the Scotch Lords, or the young King will be destroyed, and a Frenchman will be king and marry Henry's sister.[2]

The scandal had become so public that it passed into the diplomatic correspondence of other Courts. The Bishop of Badajos, who heard the report from Wolsey on 12th December, informed Charles v. of it. Charles v. answered the Bishop [3]—"as to what the Cardinal, i.e. Wolsey, says about Albany, they (i.e. the English) will be cured of trusting to French promises. But he does not think any Pope would have given the Duke the dispensation he would require, especially as he has children by his present wife, la fille de Boulogne. [This is an error.] He would be more likely to do it without dispensation, trusting to get absolution afterwards." [4]

Early in the following year, 1522, the subject was brought formally before the Scottish Estates by a letter from Henry VIII., in which he charged Albany with endangering the life of the young King, and compassing "the perdition" of his sister by furthering her divorce from Angus with the object of marrying her himself. About the same time Henry instructed his envoy Sir Thomas Cheyne to declare to Francis I. that Albany proposed to marry Margaret after her divorce, and to exhort Francis to discountenance Albany's proceedings.[5]

The Estates answered this charge on 11th February, in terms as dignified as they are creditable to their good sense. "We see nane appearance quhy your Grace belieff

The answer of Queen Margaret is of the same date as the answer of the Estates.[2]

"She has received," it begins, "her brother's sharp and unkind letter, reproaching her for being so foolish as to suppose the cunning of Albany to be for her good, and for contemplating a divorce from Angus with a view of marrying Albany. Henry trusts too easily to false reports. Nothing is dearer to her than her son's weil. It is not to Henry's honour to suffer such slanders as my lord Cardinal spoke in Council, that she loved the Governor to her dishonour." "Unluckily," she added, that "her divorce from Angus" had never been contemplated either by herself or Albany. As the divorce suit had already begun, and was well known to Wolsey and the English Court, through the letters from John Clerk, the English envoy at Rome, it was impossible this falsehood could be credited. Its expression gave little chance that the rumour of her intrigue with Albany would be set at rest by her mere denial. The report that Margaret Tudor and Albany desired to marry was not unnaturally revived in 1524, after the death of Albany's wife. It is twice referred to by Dr Magnus, the English envoy to Scotland, in his correspondence with Wolsey towards the close of that and the beginning of the following year. "I conceive," he writes in the second of these letters,[1] which contains the last reference to the subject I have noticed, dated Edinburgh, 24th January 1525, "by my Lord Cassillis that Harry Stuart reported that over and beside such matters as Grosselles (a French agent of Albany) proposed in open presence, he wrote, sent, and delivered sundry other secret letters to the Queen's Grace for procuring a marriage between the Duke of Albany and the Queen's Grace; which letters the said Harry saith came into his hands, and because he allegeth he was one of the principal takers furth of the young King, and putting his Grace to large and liberty, and that therefore he thinketh if ever the Duke shall come again to Scotland it will cost him his life. He therefore hath so instanced, solicit, and laboured the Queen's Grace that her Grace is nothing inclined nor mynded neither to the said Duke of Albany nor to the devotion of France, but clearly to follow the high pleasure of the King's Highness her brodir. And yet some suspect that her Grace has written privy letters into France, which in anywise I cannot concur nor believe, but suppose the contrary to be true."

It is difficult to extract the truth from this tangled web of plot and counter-plot, spying and lying, or to penetrate what schemes may at different points of time have passed through the busy brain and fickle heart of Margaret Tudor. The sequel is well known—Margaret at last, in 1528, procured a papal divorce, largely through the use of Albany's influence and purse, and she married, when a third legal marriage became possible, not Albany, but Harry Stuart, created Lord Methven, with whom she had been too intimate before, and from whom, not long after her marriage, she was divorced.

It is very unlikely, though not perhaps impossible, that

Albany desired to marry her, though he undoubtedly wished to procure her name and influence, waning, but not yet lost, in support of his Scottish policy. It is more possible that Margaret may have had such a design. She certainly at this juncture desired to please Albany, and she succeeded in getting from him the money she so sorely needed, and his powerful aid at Rome in favour of her divorce. But the question whether there was more between them than a rapprochement of interest, but not of love, has been deemed one of the open questions of Scottish history.

The correspondence already quoted, with one important letter still to be noticed, throws considerable light, if it does not fix with certainty, the approximate date of the picture, which is our immediate subject. It cannot have been painted prior to October 1521, as Albany had not returned to Scotland till that month, and it was, as we have seen, in that month that the rumour of a possible marriage of Albany and Margaret Tudor was set on foot, apparently chiefly by Wolsey, not without plausible grounds, combining the intelligence he received from Rome, Scotland, and the Borders. It cannot have been painted later than May 1524, when Albany finally quitted Scotland. But we can arrive, I think, nearer its actual date, and may even probably fix the scene it was drawn to represent. Albany, after coming to Scotland on 19th March 1521, returned to France on 15th October 1522. It was during this period that the scandal of too intimate relations between Margaret and Albany was most plausible and most actively propagated by their enemies in Scotland and by the English Court. Though each had a living spouse, the diplomatists of that age, to whom the facts were quite well known, did not count this an insuperable obstacle, and history, more impartial than diplomacy, is too well aware of the facilities for the dissolution of marriage at this period in the hands of the Court of Rome, to consider such a double divorce impossible. That of Angus was ultimately procured; that of Albany would have been more difficult, for the necessary dispensation to allow him to marry his first cousin had no doubt been granted in regular form. Possibly the contingency contemplated was her death, as she died, we have seen, shortly after, and may already have been in declining health, and at no time appears as an important factor in Albany's life. It was during the same period, and a small portion of it, that it is now necessary to concentrate attention. This period is the fortnight from Candlemas, 1st February to 14th February 1522, during which Thomas Benolt, the English Clarencieux herald, was in Edinburgh. He came as the envoy from Henry VIII. to demand the return of Albany to France, to accuse him of the design of marrying Margaret Tudor, and to defy him if he declined to leave the kingdom.[1] Benolt had already been sent to Scotland in 1516 to act as a spy on Albany.[2] With the adroitness of a diplomatic spy, he had made himself agreeable both to Margaret and to Albany,[3] and had nearly persuaded Albany to visit the English Court. His return in 1522 was partly due to the request of Margaret herself.

The letters he carried to the Scottish Estates and the answers he received have been already quoted. A letter from him to Wolsey,[4] written on 15th February 1522, gives a full and interesting account of his reception, and deserves special attention. "He reached Edinburgh," he says, "on Saturday, 31st January, Candlemas Eve, and found the Queen lodging in the house of a Burgess." On presenting his letters, she, after reading them, was marvellously abashed, and said, "she perceived the King held her in heinous displeasure owing to ill reports. She only desired Albany in Scotland because before he came she was ill treated, and had as simple living as any poor gentlewoman. She had been compelled to part with her jewels till Albany commanded the Comptroller to pay her. She had been well treated since his arrival, and she desires nothing to her dishonour, which she regards as much as any poor gentlewoman or princess. Her son is well kept, and has nothing to fear from the Duke. On Sunday, Candlemas Day, Albany sent for Clarencieux to Holyrood, and he delivered Henry's letters in the presence of the Lords. After dinner Clarencieux had a private meeting with him in his chamber, when he complained of the bitterness of Henry's letter, protested that he never did anything to the hurt of the young King, and declared that he had returned to Scotland because he had sworn on the evangels an oath nothing would induce him to break. The Lords had appointed him Governor, and he would risk his life and goods for them, and would not fail them for the sake of the King his master, his wife, or all he had in France. As to the charge of his damnable abusion of the King's sister, moving her to leave her husband and marry him, he said that when he was last in Rome the Queen desired him to sue for a divorce, and that he obtained a Bull, which he sent her, but did not show Clarencieux. He swore by the Sacrament he saw between the Priest's hands [1] that day that he might break his neck if ever he minded to marry her. He marvelled the King should think so ill of his sister, and that the Cardinal should have said in the Council he kept the Queen as his wife or concubine. One wife was enough for him. Henry had complained that his sister was not well treated, but the fact was she was well treated, and by his means. On the following

[1] Albany was superstitious in his conduct as well as his oaths, and perhaps the object at his neck in the picture whose exact character it is not easy to discover, may be "a relic" which, we are told, "he was in the habit of wearing."

Saturday, the 6th, Margaret sent for Clarencieux. He went, and found Albany with her. She expressed her gratitude to Albany, and said it would continue so long as he acted honourably. Albany replied that he would never act otherwise. He also said he was always willing to be friendly with England; but if the King made war on his nephew he would defend him. This conversation was in French, that Albany might understand it, as Clarencieux himself, who had often been in France, also no doubt did. On Monday, 8th, Clarencieux met the Lords in Parliament at the Tolbooth, and desired to have his letters read openly. He was greeted with many grim looks, both from high and low, and was desired to withdraw. On his return he was told that they had unanimously invited the Duke, and would not dismiss him." The letter concludes with a reference to Albany's preparation for war, which Clarencieux had observed, and states that Albany had written to France by a pursuivant, who is now with him at Norham. "The pursuivant," he says, "is but a simple fellow; wherefore I trust to find means to see his papers, and to show your Grace the effect of them." A postscript adds, that he had something to communicate to the King alone from Albany. From the tone of this letter two things appear plain: that Albany and the Queen denied there was any ground for the scandalous report of their intimacy; and that, notwithstanding, Clarencieux did not quite trust them, and reported to the English Court what he had seen and heard, without comment, but not without suggestions which persons already suspicious might read between the lines.

This Volume of the Exchequer Rolls furnishes another piece of evidence in support of the view here submitted. In the Account rendered on 31st May 1522 of Robert Barton the Comptroller, whom Margaret familiarly calls "Our Comptroller Robin Barton" in one of her letters, but Gavin Douglas "that sea revar and pirate Albany had made Comptroller," there occurs without further date this entry, "De quibus allocatur compotanti per liberationem factam Margarete regine Scotie in sex millibus quadrigentis octo libris et sexdectim denariis per preceptum domini gubernatoris et dominorum consilii, in defectu solutionis sue conjuncte infeodationis propter disturbium patriæ, sic quod pace succedente hujus modi summam sex millium quadringintarum octo librarum et sexdecim denariorum, pro qua solutione obligavit suam conjunctam infeodationem ut patet per actum dominorum consilii desuper factum," which being translated is—"From the sums for which the Accountant has to answer for, there is allowed to him in respect of the delivery made to Margaret, Queen of Scotland, £6408 : 1 : 4 by the precept of the Lord Governor and the Lords of Council, on account of the failure of payment of her conjunct infeftment on account of the disturbance of the country, on condition that when peace ensues she should repay that sum, for which she pledged her conjunct infeftment." Is not this transaction glanced at in the picture? It is impossible to say more than that the scene painted singularly fits what would have been necessary to convey it to the spectator. The coins on the table, the two purses on Albany's person, point to the possession and delivery of money on his side. The handkerchief, if passing from the Queen to Albany, may cover a deed which may well be the mortgage of her conjunct infeftment, which she had signed or was prepared to sign with one of the pens on the table; or if it is passing from Albany to the Queen, may cover money given her in exchange for the mortgage. The mysterious third figure may be the English envoy pointing his finger at Albany and the butterfly as proof of his suspicions. I strongly suspect the visit of the Clarencieux herald to Edinburgh was the occasion which gave rise to the painting of this picture, and that one of the interviews between Margaret and Albany, which took place about that time, is represented by it. We may perhaps detect in the third figure in the Royal livery, whose dress bears an R for Rex on its breast, Clarencieux himself. Could we see through the portly figure of Margaret, we might perhaps find H for Henricus on the other half of the front of his coat. It is so far adverse to this conjecture that he does not wear the tabard of a herald, but the tabard was only worn on solemn occasions, and a herald of that time, like an officer of our own, might prefer not to wear full uniform when summoned to a semi-private interview with a lady.

But let us now look again at the details of the picture, to see whether it does not make further revelations as to its purport. Several of the objects on the table—the ink-bottle, the book, and the loose papers—may be the ordinary properties a painter might introduce into any of his works. Sir George Reid, P.R.S.A., who favoured me with his opinion on the subject, was good enough to show me a photograph of a well known portrait by Holbein of Jorg Gysen, a German merchant of the London Steel Yard, now in the Museum of Berlin, in which there is an ink-bottle almost identical in form with that in the present picture. But certain details of the present picture are certainly not ordinary properties, and have a symbolic or satiric meaning. These are, (1) the medal which hangs from the finely chased and inlaid silver and gold belt of Margaret Tudor, (2) the carnation inserted in the handkerchief Albany receives from Margaret Tudor, and (3) the butterfly to which the third figure points.

The medal has the inscription still legible round it, "Manet Enim Angelus Domini Gladium Habens Et Secet te in medium," Daniel xiii.

The thirteenth chapter of Daniel, in the Vulgate, contains the story of Susanna and the Elders, and this text is the end of verse 59. To follow the story, it is well to give the passage from verse 31; but it is needless to recall the other particulars of the charge against Susanna by the Elders of "companying with a young man."

"Then said Daniel unto them, Put these two aside one far from another, and I will examine them. So they were put asunder one from another. And he called one of them, and said unto him, O thou that art waxen old in wickedness, now thy sins which thou hast committed aforetime are come to light: for thou hast pronounced false judgment, and hast condemned the innocent, and hast let the guilty go free; albeit the Lord saith, The innocent and righteous shalt thou not slay. Now then, if thou hast seen her, tell me Under what tree sawest thou them companying together? who answered, 'Under a mastick tree.' And Daniel said, 'Very well; thou hast lied against thine own head; for even now the angel of God hath received the sentence of God to cut thee in two.' So he put him aside, and commanded to bring the other, and said unto him, 'O thou seed of Chanaan, and not of Juda, beauty hath deceived thee, and lust hath perverted thine heart. Thus have ye dealt with the daughters of Israel, and they for fear companied with you: but the daughter of Juda would not abide your wickedness. Now therefore tell me Under what tree didst thou take them companying together?' Who answered, 'Under an holm tree.' Then said Daniel unto him, 'Well; thou hast also lied against thine own head: for the angel of God waiteth with the sword to cut thee in two that he may destroy thee.'"

The ground of the medal represents this scene. It contains five figures—a boy, Daniel, a woman, Susanna, the two Elders, and an angel bearing a sword. It is scarcely necessary to point the application. Margaret Tudor asserts, by wearing this medal, her innocence of improper relations with Albany, and that a Daniel will come to judgment to condemn the false witness of Wolsey, Gavin Douglas, and Lord Dacre.

The carnation is, though not so certainly, most probably, also symbolic. It was no doubt a favourite flower of the formal garden, and of the lovers of flowers, painters or poets, men or women. Its common English name was the Gylly or July flower, but it was often called the "coronation" from its shape, or "carnation" from its flesh colour. A carnation in full bloom in Scotland in February, the probable date of this picture, would no doubt have been a marvel; but it is not necessary to assume strict accuracy on such a point by the painter, especially if the flower had a symbolic meaning as well as natural beauty to attract his art,

> Pictoribus atque poetis
> Quidlibet andendi semper fuit equa polestas.

That the carnation had a meaning in the language of flowers is shown by a pretty passage in "Colin Clout's Calendar," written about 1579, for the month of April, where Spenser writes—

> "Bring hither the pinke and purple collumbine
> With gilly flowers;
> Bring coronations and sops in wine,
> Worne of paramours."

"All these," says the gloss, "be the names of flowers. Sops in wine, a flower much like to a carnation, but differing in size and quantity."

The carnation in this picture is red and white, so possibly it is the variety which got the name of "sops in wine."

The carnation may perhaps indicate that, in spite of the denial of the medal, the artist, who probably knew the truth no more than the diplomatists of whom he may have been the interpreter, insinuates there was some ground for the rumour that Margaret and Albany were lovers.

The butterfly can scarcely be deemed a mere accident, apart from the design of the picture. Insects, no doubt, as larger animals, were favourites with the artists of the 16th century, as in the well known story of Holbein painting a fly on the picture of a brother artist as the token of the visit of a master. But a finger pointing to a butterfly means something more than a butterfly. Pinkerton's observant eye and historical knowledge led him to conjecture that this represents what he calls l'Amour Voltige—the flying or fickle love of a royal coquette; nor has any better suggestion since been made. If so, the interpretation would be, that the figure in the background—the English envoy or spy—declares by his attitude there was a secret understanding, not without an amorous tinge, though of a transitory nature, between Margaret and Albany.

On the questions by whom and for whom this picture was painted, it is impossible to offer any suggestions which are not mere conjectures, which is unfortunate, as the discovery of this might give another clue to the meaning of the picture. Dr Waagen, who saw it at Luton, in Bedfordshire, to which it had been sent by a prior Marquis of Bute from Cardiff, says in his Treasures of Art:—"As far as the ruined state of the picture allows the judgment, it may be a genuine picture of the earliest period of Holbein's residence in England." But Holbein did not come to England till 1526, and there is no picture of his proved to have been painted in England earlier than 1527. If the date of this picture is 1522, it cannot be by Holbein. The art of portraiture in England did not, however, commence with Holbein, although he was its chief master. The attribution of portraits to him at a subsequent period was a natural wish of their owners, but the more accurate art criticism of the present time has shown conclusively that many works have been ascribed to him which were painted before his arrival in England in 1526, or after his death in 1543. Of the painters who practised this art in England in the earlier part of the reign of Henry VIII., the following names have been preserved as artists employed by the King:—John Broune, Andrew Wright, Vincent Volpe or Fox, Anthony Toto, Bartholomew Jenni, Luke, and Gerard Hornebaud, and two women, Susanna Hornebaud and Alice Carwilliam, who were painters of miniatures. It is not easy to ascertain the exact dates during which these artists painted in England; but from a learned paper on "The Contemporaries and Successors of Holbein," addressed by John Gough Nichols, F.S.A.,[1] to the

[1] Read March 13, 1862.

English Society of Antiquaries, I learn that while most of these are not proved to have painted in England earlier than Holbein, the following probably did:—John Broune, whose patent as serjeant-painter is dated December 20, 1511, held that office more than twenty years, and one of his official duties and privileges was to furnish tabards for the heralds. In his will he bequeathed to his servant Bagnal after his death "his grete Boke of Armys and boke of trickyngs of armys, and boke of armys and badges in his study." He was at one time alderman of London, and a man of wealth, whose portrait, though not the original, which was burnt, may still be seen in the Paynter Stainers' Hall in Trinity Lane.

Vincent Volpe's work was of a different kind. He supplied, in 1514, banners and streamers for the "Great Henry." In 1531 he was paid for painting plats of Rye and Hastings, and it is conjectured he may have executed some of the curious military pictures, between plans and bird's-eye views, still on the walls of Hampton Court.

Luke Hornebaud, a Flemish painter, was certainly in England as early as 1529, when his wife was buried at Fulham; and Gerard, possibly an elder brother, was made a denizen by letters-patent, and appointed Painter to the King in 1524. The portrait of Henry VIII. now at Cardiff, as well as the portraits of the same monarch at Warwick and Kimbolton, are now ascribed by the best judges to Gerard Hornebaud rather than to Holbein, to whom they had been formerly attributed. Either of the Hornebauds may quite possibly have been in England as early as 1522, and perhaps, of the artists whose names are known, Gerard Hornebaud is, from his association with the Royal service, the most probable author of the picture here in question. But it may also quite well have been painted by some unknown and forgotten artist, and as a work of art it is superior to Henry VIII.'s portrait at Cardiff. The existence of the office of Serjeant-Painter in Henry's reign, and the close connection of the holder of that office, as well as of other painters in the Royal service, with the College of Heralds, have a special bearing on the present inquiry. It seems not impossible that the picture is the work of one of these who had accompanied the Clarencieux herald to Scotland in 1522.

If the external history of the picture could be exactly ascertained, it would throw additional light upon its author and the purpose for which it was painted. But this point also is attended with considerable difficulty, although Mr Godwin, whose opinion is entitled to great respect, entertains no doubt that it originally belonged to the family of Windsor. The picture, so far as its history can be traced, has always been associated with Cardiff, for its removal to Luton Hoo in Bedfordshire, where it was when the engraving was made in 1799, was due to the first Marquis of Bute having sent it to a gallery his father the third Earl had built at that seat, and it was brought back, after a fire at Luton in 1842, to London, and in 1892 to its old home at Cardiff.

Cardiff was acquired by the marriage of John, fourth Earl and first Marquis of Bute, in 1766, to Charlotte, eldest daughter and co-heiress of Herbert, second and last Viscount Windsor of Ireland, and Baron Mountjoy of the Isle of Wight. His father, Thomas, who received these titles respectively in 1695 and 1711, had succeeded to the Cardiff estate through his marriage in 1702 with Charlotte, widow of a son of Lord-Chancellor Jeffries, daughter and heiress of Philip, seventh Earl of Pembroke, on whose death in 1683 that title passed to his brother, but the estate of Cardiff to his daughter. By his will in 1729, Thomas, Lord Windsor, bequeathed his pictures, family and others, to his son Herbert, whose daughter, as above noticed, married the first Marquis of Bute.

Many family portraits, both of the Windsors and the Herberts, are still at Cardiff, as well as the portrait of Henry VIII. already mentioned, and one of Queen Elizabeth. The period is long between 1522 and 1766, and it is of course possible that the Herberts or the Windsors may have acquired the picture by marriage into some other family or by purchase; but it seems most probable that it originally belonged to one or other of these families. The founders of both were amongst the new nobility of the Tudor period. Sir William Herbert, first Earl of Pembroke of the second creation in 1513, was an esquire of the King's body in 1534, married a sister of Queen Katharine Parr, and was one of the creations of Henry VIII. The chief part of his life belongs to the later period of Henry VIII. and the reign of Edward VI., when he was created Lord Herbert of Cardiff in 1551, and that of Elizabeth, during which he died in 1569.

The founder of the Windsor family, whose elder branch became Earls of Plymouth, was Sir Andrew Windsor, a gentleman of ancient family lineage and considerable estates in Berkshire. He became, though not a great, yet a considerable personage in the early period of the reign of Henry VIII. and was made a Knight of the Bath at the coronation in 1509, along with twenty-five others of the "most able persons and honourable blood not yet knighted." He was created a Knight Banneret on 16th August 1513 for his valour in the Battle of the Spurs. He accompanied Princess Mary on her marriage with Louis XII., and he went with Henry VIII. to the Field of the Cloth of Gold in 1520.

In the Parliament of 1529 he was summoned to the House of Peers as Baron Windsor of Bradenham in Berks. In 1535 he became Keeper of the King's Wardrobe, an office he held till his death in 1543. The circumstances of his life must have brought him into intimate contact with the officials of the Royal Court, and there can be little doubt he must have known well Thomas Benolt, the Clarencieux herald, who was also present at the Field of the Cloth of Gold. It may be suspected, though it cannot be proved, that it was for Sir Andrew Windsor this picture was painted, or at least that he became its owner, and that from him it has descended, along with the other Windsor portraits, to the Marquis of Bute.
